MORNING HOUR DEBATES
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the Chair will now recognize Members from lists submitted by the majority and minority leaders for morning hour debates. The Chair will alternate recognition between the parties, with each party limited to not to exceed 30 minutes, and each Member, except the majority leader, the minority leader, or the minority whip, limited to not to exceed 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. WELLER) for 5 minutes.

URGING MEMBERS TO JOIN IN OPPOSITION TO H.R. 3479, LEGISLATION WHICH EXPANDS O'HARE AIRPORT BUT EXCLUDES FUNDING FOR PEOTONE AIRPORT
Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, today is the first day we are in session in the week. Usually on the first day we deal with noncontroversial issues, something called the Suspension Calendar. It is my understanding we have almost 15 pieces of legislation before us today on what is normally a noncontroversial day. But I want to draw the attention of my colleagues to a very controversial piece of legislation that is on the Suspension Calendar, and I want to ask my colleagues to join me in opposition to this legislation, legislation which, frankly, breaks a bipartisan agreement back in my home State in Illinois.

I am referring to H.R. 3479, legislation that is before us that we in the Chicago area know as the O'Hare bill, legislation that federally mandates construction of O'Hare and expansion of O'Hare. I want to ask my colleagues to join me today in opposition to this legislation.

Let me explain why. I stand here in strong support of O'Hare. I stand in strong support of Midway. I also believe we need to build a third airport to serve the Chicago region. As we know, air travel is going to double over the coming decade, and O'Hare and Midway in the Chicago area are today at capacity. We need to rebuild and modernize O'Hare, but we also need to build a third airport in south suburban Peotone to serve the Chicago region.

This past year, Governor Ryan and Mayor Daley entered into a historic agreement which provided for the reconfiguration and expansion of O'Hare, as well as development of Chicago's south suburban airport near Peotone, Illinois. My colleague, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI), introduced legislation which originally would have codified this agreement into law, modernizing O'Hare, and pushing development of a south suburban airport.

I had originally stood here and stated time after time that I wanted to support this legislation and that I was ready to cosponsor the bill if it truly reflected the integrity of the agreement between the Governor and the mayor.

However, this legislation, H.R. 3479, which will be before us this afternoon, does not reflect the agreement between the Governor and the mayor. In fact, the Governor has indicated he does not support the bill today in its current form. That is why I think it is important to note that H.R. 3479 breaks the bipartisan agreement between Governor Ryan and Mayor Daley...
O'Hare. That is why I ask my colleagues to join me in opposition to this bill today.

My hope is that the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure will go back and move legislation again, and to the floor, which truly reflects the bipartisan agreement which expands O'Hare as well as moves forward on construction of an airport at Peotone.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation, as I noticed, breaks the agreement between the mayor and the Governor. I would note that the legislation, H.R. 3479, has no language in it which reflects the agreement that the Governor and mayor agreed to, which moves forward with the construction of a third airport at Peotone.

The legislation takes away the State of Illinois’s rights and undercuts the authority of the State of Illinois to make its own decisions regarding air travel.

H.R. 3479 completely ignores the needs of the south suburbs of Chicago, where 2.5 million people live within 45 minutes of the proposed airport at Peotone. Additionally, I would note that failure to develop Peotone would shortwire Chicagoans by forfeiting almost 250,000 new jobs.

Unfortunately, H.R. 3479 does not pay any heed to the studies that have, since the 1980s, consistently shown that Chicago, the region, and our Nation will need a new airport within 15 minutes of Peotone. Both the Governor and mayor recognized these studies when they reached their agreement last year.

I would note that the bill that will be before us today breaks the agreement between the mayor and the Governor and does not reflect the integrity of the agreement. Nevertheless, the bill imposes a Federal solution on a State problem. This is the same Wall Street scheme. This is the same Wall Street in a privatization of our airports.

In fact, the three members of the Illinois delegation most affected by H.R. 3479, the gentlemen from Illinois, Mr. HYDE, Mr. JACKSON, and myself, stand in opposition to this bill this afternoon.

I support Chicago-O'Hare and believe it needs to be expanded and modernized to be a premier airport with more capacity, but expanding O'Hare is not enough. It will not solve the capacity problem or face it in the future. Even with the development of a south suburban airport, O'Hare can still expect a 40 percent increase in passenger load, so they are still going to increase their business.

Air travel is expected to double in the next 15 years. Expanding O'Hare will take 12 to 15 years, and we know we cannot and airplanes while pouring concrete. The south suburban airport at Peotone could be expanding capacity in just 4 to 5 years as a complement to O'Hare expansion. However, this legislation will kill any development of a south suburban airport and keep Chicago aviation gridlocked for years to come.

Mr. Speaker, we need a bipartisan solution. The mayor and the Governor move together with an agreement. The bill before us today, H.R. 3479, fails to honor that agreement; in fact, it breaks the agreement between the mayor and the Governor.

I urge opposition to this bill and ask that my colleagues join me in voting "no."

CORPORATE GREED

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it has been almost a week since President Bush was here to present his plan to curb executive greed and corporate misgovernment. The response, unfortunately, has been pretty underwhelming. The markets dropped by several hundred points day after day after day. The press and the American people have openly questioned the President’s commitment to real change.

Even Wall Street workers who attended the speech, mostly Bush supporters, wondered aloud about how much was about politics and how much was about real change.

Why was this speech so poorly received? One, because so many officials in the Bush administration are themselves former corporate CEOs, lawyers, and accountants who lack the moral authority or the will to change corporate practices, or even to enforce current law.

Second, because in the middle of the current crisis, the President and the Vice President, both former oil company CEOs, have been forced to answer questions about their own ethics and business practices in the private sector.

Third, because, despite his rhetorical calls for corporate America to clean up its act, President Bush continues to oppose real reform on Capitol Hill. He has refused to support meaningful pension and accounting reform; he opposes legislation to halt offshore tax avoidance by companies, by making matters worse, even though America’s capital markets lost $2.4 trillion last year, more than the gross domestic product of Germany, the President continues to favor turning Social Security over to Wall Street in a privatization scheme. This is the same Wall Street that advised American investors to buy Enron and WorldCom and Adelphia and others while their analysts privately ridiculed those companies.

In addition, the President has supported a wave of bills that have been written by and for big industry. He supports energy legislation written by the oil companies, he supports environmental legislation written by the chemical companies, he supports privatization of Social Security written by Wall Street bankers.

Most recently, the President endorsed a prescription drug benefit to be administered by the health insurance industry through our HMOs. This plan would provide seniors with totally inadequate coverage, making no provision for dealing with the outrageous prices Americans are paying for their prescription drugs. It would undercut seniors’ purchasing power and enable the drug industry to sustain its outrageous drug prices.

The Democrats have convinced the brand-name big drug companies that prices are not a problem. Democrats are more concerned about the burden on seniors and their families who are being gouged by the predatory pricing of the prescription drug industry. The Democratic plan provides a direct prescription drug benefit inside Medicare and combats high prescription drug prices. The Republican plan, written by the drug companies, calls for a privatized system that coddles industry and leaves gaps in coverage for seniors.

The Republicans claim they are offering the best drug benefit possible under current budgetary constraints; but a year ago, when the Bush tax cut plan, the tax breaks, which went overwhelmingly to the richest 1 percent of people in this society, was being debated, we were assured by the President and Republican leadership of huge budget surpluses. We were told these surpluses would be enough to address long-term solvency of Medicare and Social Security and still have the money for education and the money for a prescription drug benefit. Since then, these projected surpluses promised by President Bush and others have evaporated, mostly because of the overly-generous-to-the-most-privileged-in-this-society tax cut.

Maybe the President and his administration, full of corporate executives, were using the same accounting practices as America’s big companies. Maybe, Mr. Speaker, this is what President Bush and Vice President Cheney meant when they said that, under their leadership, the country would be run like a corporation.

HONORING TED WILLIAMS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, today we will honor Ted Williams, the baseball legend, here on the House floor. I am here this morning to also honor him.

On July 5, of course, this year, he died. He is one of baseball’s greatest legends. He was known as the “Splendid Splinter,” “Teddy Ballgame,” “the Kid,” “the Thumper”; he was a man... who turned the art of batting into a science.

Mr. Speaker, he began his major league career with the Boston Red Sox on December 7, 1937, and played for the team exclusively for 19 years. He retired with a career high .344 batting average, the last player to hit over 400 for a full season in 1941. Ted Williams is tied for 11th all time, with 521 home runs, and 11th with 1,839 RBIs.

He won two Triple Crowns, and was a two-time MVP. He held six American League batting championships and received 18 All-star game selections.

These tremendous achievements, Mr. Speaker, were reached despite Ted missing five seasons serving his country as a naval aviator in World War II, and then later he went on to become a Marine aviator, flying 39 combat missions in Korea and earning an Air Medal and two Gold Stars.

On January 20, 1966, Ted Williams was inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame, and on May 29, 1984, the Red Sox formally retired his number 9.

In 1984, the so-called “Einstein of batting” opened the Ted Williams Museum and Library in Hernando, Florida, becoming the number one tourist attraction in Citrus County. My family has had the opportunity to visit this wonderful museum, and I was his Congressman for many years. We had an opportunity to meet and talk with him many times.

But Mr. Speaker, Ted Williams was much more to his country than just a baseball legend.

He was also a legend in terms of helping others. When I first came to Congress, Ted Williams, as I mentioned, was one of my constituents. Unfortunately, districts were redrawn in 1991 and I moved away from him. However, I continued to work with him and to speak with him on a number of key issues. And one issue, Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with you this afternoon.

In 1995 he was recovering from a stroke that he suffered. During his therapy he came to know a young woman whose name was Tricia Miranti. She was also going through therapy much like him, and he used to play checkers with her and talk to her.

She had a brain hemorrhage which she suffered at the age of five. Ted Williams is a man who exemplified determination and hard work. He was impressed with her determination and her hard work and he watched her go through therapy. They became fast friends and out of their friendship grew Williams’ creation of a scholarship fund for disabled students.

In 1997 I had the honor of working with Ted to raise funds for that scholarship program. Ted’s dedication to Tricia and those who share her experiences can be summed up in the following quote he gave to an article in 1998. He said, “It makes me feel lucky.

If ever, as long as I live, I can help anyone in any way possible, I will. It makes you just feel great.”

This statement, of course, is no surprise to those who knew Ted. His passionate support of the Jimmy Fund, an organization dedicated to raising funds for cancer research and treatment for children, is also legend. In his autobiography Ted wrote, “I think one of the greatest things ever said is that a man never stands so high as when he stoops to help a kid.”

Mr. Speaker, Ted Williams is one of the greatest hitters to ever play the game, if not the greatest. But he should also be remembered for what he accomplished outside of the game, accomplishments that we will not find in career statistics, but the impact of which will be felt for years to come. God bless Ted Williams and his family.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA FISCAL YEAR 2003 BUDGET REQUEST ACT—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 107–)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to my constitutional authority and consistent with sections 202(c) and (e) of the The District of Columbia Financial Management and Responsibility Assistance Act of 1995 and section 446 of The District of Columbia Self-Governmental Reorganization Act as amended in 1989, I am transmitting the District of Columbia’s Fiscal Year 2003 Budget Request Act. The proposed FY 2003 Budget Request Act reflects the major programmatic objectives of the Mayor and the Council of the District of Columbia. For FY 2003, the District estimates total revenue and expenditures of $5.7 billion.

GEORGE W. BUSH.

REMEMBERING OUR VETERANS THROUGH SERVICE ORGANIZATIONS

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, 1941 was a banner year for American baseball and basketball in the American League, as it were. In that year Joe DiMaggio hit in 56 games straight, and Ted Williams batted 406. These are not the important historical facts, although they are greater than the worth of those who follow baseball, but both of them did something great for those of us who follow baseball and business practices as oil company CEOs? Or could it be, because despite his rhetorical calls for corporate America to clean up its act, the President continues to oppose real reform on Capitol Hill?

Maybe, Mr. Speaker, with the recent spate of corporate collapses, the American people have begun to wonder whether running the company like a corporation, as the President and Vice President have promised, is all that good an idea.

Section 102 of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1994 (42 U.S.C. 3712) is amended in subsection (a)(5) by inserting "coordinate and" before "provide".

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 3482.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, our society has become technologically dependent. Computers and related technologies have improved every aspect of our lives, our health care, our education, and our security. Unfortunately, this same technology has also facilitated terrorist and criminal activity alike. At the stroke of a key, someone can cause millions of dollars of damage to our economy as well as threaten our national security and the public's safety.

This threat is not new; but after the September 11 attacks, the risks are greater. Even prior to the attacks, the Committee on the Judiciary's Subcommittee on Crime, Terrorism, and Homeland Security was working on legislation to impose Federal law to protect the Nation from cybercrime and cyberterrorism.

Last summer, the subcommittee held three hearings on the growing threat of cybercrime and cyberterrorism. Those hearings highlighted the fact that cybercrime knows no borders or restraints and can substantially harm the American people and our economy.

The law enforcement officials and private industry representatives at the hearings agreed that better coordination, cooperation and information sharing were needed as well as stronger penalties for cyberattacks.

The U.S.A. PATRIOT Act, which the Committee on the Judiciary adopted much of H.R. 295, an earlier cybersecurity bill introduced by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH), and began to improve the Nation's cybersecurity, this bill, the Cyber Security Enhancement Act of 2002, continues that work.

The bill strengthens penalties to better reflect the seriousness of cyberattacks, assists State and local law enforcement through better grant management, accountability and dissemination of technical advice and information, helps protect the Nation's critical infrastructure, and enhances privacy protections.

On May 8, the Committee on the Judiciary reported this bill favorably by voice vote. The bill as introduced and reported out of committee contained an authorization for the National Infrastructure Protection Center within the Department of Justice.

Since that time, it appears that the center will be transferred out of the Department of Justice into the new Department of Homeland Security proposed in H.R. 5005. Accordingly, the committee has removed that authorization to be consistent with H.R. 5005 in this amended version of H.R. 3482. The bill also contains a few technical changes as well.

H.R. 3482, the Cyber Security Enhancement Act of 2002, is designed to increase the cybersecurity of our Nation against criminal and terrorist attacks. As one of the most technologically advanced nations in the world, we must deal with a new vulnerability, the interconnectedness of our Nation's critical and national security. I urge Members to support this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.
Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) in support of H.R. 3482, the Cyber Security Act of 2002. I support the concept of allowing Internal Service Providers (ISP) to give information to law enforcement officials when emergency threat of death or serious bodily injury exists.

In general, information held by an ISP must be made available to reasonably believe an immediate danger exists. If there is time to do all that, there is time to go to a magistrate or judge and get a search warrant. I support changing "reasonably believe" to "believes in good faith," as the bill does.

Under current law, an ISP is authorized to release information to law enforcement officials when the ISP reasonably believes an immediate danger exists. An assessment of relevant information must be made. However, if the FBI presents information which an ISP believes, if true, would present a threat of death or serious bodily injury, the ISP dispatcher on duty should not have to wake up the corporate general counsel to determine if it can be reasonably believed. If there is time to do all that, there is time to go to a magistrate or judge and get a warrant. Accordingly, I support changing "reasonably believe" to "believes in good faith," as the bill does.

I appreciate the adjustments Subcommittee Chairman SMITH made to the bill to address the concerns that I had with the bill, including adding a reporting requirement for law enforcement officials to assess the information to determine if it can be reasonably believed. If there is time to do all that, there is time to go to a magistrate or judge and get a warrant. With this understanding of the bill, Mr. Speaker, I support it and urge my colleagues to vote for it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH), the subcommittee chairman.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, many people think of cybercrime simply as a form of vandalism involving hacking or planting viruses. Cybercrime is much more than that. It can devastate our businesses, economy and national infrastructure. Cybercrime also includes child pornography, which terrorizes our children, and identity theft, which computer technology to steal life savings and the identities of unsuspecting individuals. These attacks threaten the lives and the livelihoods of many innocent victims.

Mr. Speaker, a crime is still a crime, whether it occurs on the Internet or on the street. We are in a war against terrorism. According to a recent newspaper article, "Unsettling signs of al Qaeda's aims and skills in cyberspace have led some government experts to conclude that terrorists are at the threshold of using the Internet as a direct instrument of bloodshed."

The article stated, "Most significantly, perhaps, U.S. investigators have found evidence in the logs that mark a browser's path through the Internet that al Qaeda operators spent time at sites that offered ware and programming instructions for the digital switches that run power, water, transport and communication grids."

Cybercrimes and cybercriminals know no borders. As long as there is technology, cybercrime will exist. We must improve our Nation's cybersecurity and strengthen our criminal laws to prevent, deter and respond to such attacks.

This legislation, H.R. 3482, the Cyber Security Enhancement Act of 2002, increases penalties to better reflect the seriousness of cybercrime, enhances Federal, State and local law enforcement efforts through better grant management, accountability and dissemination of technical advice and implementation guidelines. The Information Technology Association of America stated that the bill is important for strengthening guidelines on sentencing people who are convicted of cybercrimes. The Information Technology Industry Council concluded that the bill will remove obstacles to information-sharing between the public and private sectors to strengthen Internet security.

Mr. Speaker, we must protect our Nation and our way of life from the growing threat of cyberattacks. Penalties and law enforcement capabilities must be able to prevent and deter cybercriminals. Until we secure our cyberinfrastructure, a few keystrokes away, and Internet communications, one needs to disable the economy or endanger lives. A mouse can be just as dangerous as a bullet or a bomb. That is why I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), the chairman of the Committee on Science.

Mr. BOEHLERT. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3482, the Cyber Security Enhancement Act of 2002. I want to thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH), the Subcommittee on Crime, Terrorism and Homeland Security chairman, for his excellent work in bringing this bipartisan bill to the floor. I also want to thank the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER), Judiciary chairman, former chairman of the Committee on Science, where he received his best training. From his years of service on the Committee on Science, the gentleman from Wisconsin understands that research and development are critical weapons in the war on terrorism as well as our fight against all forms of crime. We know that the next war, the current war, the ongoing war, is going to be won as much in the laboratory as on the battlefield.

Mr. Speaker, title I of the legislation enhances penalties for cybercrime and allows for better cooperation between law enforcement and the private sector to investigate cybercrime. This is critical. However, in the interest of time, I will limit my comments to title II of the bill before the House today. Title II establishes an Office of Science and Technology within the Office of Justice Programs at the Justice Department. It is a needed step forward in our fight against all forms of crime and terrorism. I have said repeatedly, the war on terrorism, like the Cold War, will be won in the laboratory as much as on the battlefield. That means that, as in the Cold War, we must properly organize our government to put the most into and get the most out of our academic, government and industry efforts to limit the use of technology, specifically information technology, is now commonplace. We rely on computers, the Internet, cell phones and pagers every day. But so, too, do the criminals and terrorists.

Increasingly criminals are becoming more and more sophisticated. Online fraud, identity theft, child pornography, computer intrusions, hacking and introduction of viruses are all on the rise. Unfortunately, U.S. law enforcement is often ill-equipped to counter this criminal high tech trend. It is particularly true for State and local law enforcement that often lack the resources, training and expertise to effectively use advanced information technology to combat crime. Currently the Justice Department does support the development of new technologies, mostly through the National Institute of Justice, to serve the needs of law enforcement and corrections agencies, but the effort as it stands today is unfocused and limited.

That is why I have sought for over 3 years to establish an office for science and technology within the Department of Justice with the mission of improving the capabilities of law enforcement at all levels. The bill before us today would do just that. Let me also note that this bill would not create a new bureaucracy. In fact, the Congressional Budget Office has scored this bill as revenue-neutral. Rather, the bill would transfer existing assets within the Justice Department to give the agency an improved science and technology capability to better respond to threats posed by technically savvy criminals and terrorists. This is a common-sense approach. Law enforcement agencies traditionally do not have research and development capabilities like those found in the military. Rather than creating a new R&D infrastructure for law enforcement, we must find ways to help law enforcement gain access to the scientific expertise found in our colleges and universities as well as our defense and national laboratories.

H.R. 3482 does this by explicitly authorizing DOJ's existing network of regional technology assistance centers, the National Law Enforcement and Corrections Technology Centers. These centers are able to leverage existing defense capabilities in sensitive areas such as information security, chemical, biological and nuclear security to provide Federal, State and local law enforcement access to the best technologies available to meet these emerging threats.

In my home district, one such center is leading the Nation in the fight against cybercrime and all forms of crime. This is the National Law Enforcement and Corrections Technology Center, Northeast Region, located at the Air Force Research Laboratory Information Directorate at Rome, New York. A program of the center's work was the establishment of the highly successful Utica Arson Strike Force in 1997. In less than a year, the city went from worst to first in the Nation in the rate of arson convictions. Leveraging the high tech expertise of the Air Force research laboratory, the center was able to create affordable technology tools for the Utica task force's use.

While the track record of the center and others around the Nation is impressive, the amount of resources available for technical assistance is meager. The entire center system, as well as the science and technology function within the Department of Justice, needs a clear congressional mandate and an adequate budget. This bill would bring needed focus to R&D in support of law enforcement and establish the Office of Science and Technology as a key liaison between DOJ and other Federal agencies.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Science recently heard testimony from a distinguished panel of the National Academy of Sciences about the need for greater science and technology investment to combat terrorism. For this reason, the Committee on Science unanimously approved the creation of an under secretary for research and development in the proposed Homeland Security Department. The bill before us today is consistent with this vision. As we move forward in this process, I hope to forge a close working partnership between DOJ's Office of Science and Technology and the new Homeland Security Department.

I look forward to working with Chairman Sensenbrenner, Chairman Smith and all members of the Committee on the Judiciary to ensure appropriate coordination of effort to help combat terrorism and to ensure that the more and more State and local first responders have access to first-rate scientific and technological expertise.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I rise to support this legislation. I just want to make note that this legislation has provided a reporting requirement placed in the bill to help address the concerns, making sure that the legislation is used properly. I would have liked to have added additional safeguards dealing with the unreasonable search and seizure, but I believe that the reporting requirement will go a long way to addressing that concern, and I would ask my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 3482, the Cyber Security Enhancement Act of 2002. This resolution achieves several goals. The act will serve as a national focal point for science and technology and it will also aid in the development and dissemination of cyber law enforcement and technology.

Moreover, it will make technical assistance available to Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies which are critical for our national security and infrastructure. Crimes of fraud in computers with protected information or computers used by the Federal Government are addressed in the legislation.

A program will be established and maintained, whereby, validated and marked, or otherwise recognize law enforcement technology products that conform to standards set by the National Infrastructure Protection Center. The National Infrastructure Protection Center will operate for regional national law enforcement and correction technology centers and, to the extent necessary, establish additional centers through a competitive process.

This bill further provides that law enforcement agencies utilize and establish forensic technology, and technologies that support the judicial process.

The use of these forensic tools will assist State and local law enforcement agencies in combating cybercrime. In addition, penalties will increase for violations where the offender knowingly causes death or serious bodily injury.

Mr. Speaker, I urge this body to support this measure as it addresses the growing and increasingly visible problem of cybercrime.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBERNENR. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CULBERSON. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBERNENR) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3482, as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBERNENR) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3482, as amended, the question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.
Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I urge the House to pass H.R. 3988 to make this change in the Federal charter of the American Legion. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas asked (Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is always important to respect our veterans and to provide additional assistance to them. This bill makes a technical amendment to the membership qualifications language of the Federal charter of the American Legion. Currently, under the statute, veterans who get out of service are eligible to become members of the American Legion if they served since “August 2, 1990 through the date of cessation of hostilities, as decided by the United States Government” and “was honorably discharged or separated from that service or continues to serve honorably after that period.”

Under the charter, however, the U.S. Government has never issued a cessation of hostilities declaration for the Persian Gulf War. This is an opportunity for us to pay tribute to the American Legion that goes beyond the purpose of the bill, which is laudable, and that is to allow the legion to expand its membership by inclusion of certain categories of veterans who heretofore have not been able to qualify.

But I want to bring into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD remembrances of the American Legion as a young boy growing up in California. Most of the parades and most of the patriotic functions of that era were either sponsored by or joined in by the American Legion, but that was not all. They also sponsored teenage baseball organizational sports, they also sponsored essay and oratorical contests in the high schools, and in a variety of ways went beyond their chief function of honoring the veteran, because they were part of the actual life of the community in so many different ways. I urge my colleagues to support this Act.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS).

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

The amendment would simply change the standard for qualification to say a veteran that “continues to serve during or after that period” will qualify for membership. This makes it clear that membership is open to thousands of active duty personnel who served during Operations Desert Shield, Desert Storm, and all of the operations that followed in Iraq, Bosnia, Kosovo, and Afghanistan.

This is an opportunity for us to pay tribute to the American Legion that goes beyond the purpose of the bill, which is laudable, and that is to allow the legion to expand its membership by inclusion of certain categories of veterans who heretofore have not been able to qualify.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.
there were two refuges for us in the various bases in which we served, and in particular, I remember in Fort Knox, Kentucky, the USO was always there on the weekends for the purpose of providing extra services and relaxation for the veterans who were serving there or the members of the Armed Forces who were serving at Fort Knox, and also the American Legion always had some kind of hostmanship-type of function to welcome the soldiers who were stationed at Fort Knox.

So for a whole series of remembrances for this Member, we support the bill and hope that many more veterans will be joining the ranks of the American Legion in the next several years.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 3988, the American Legion Amendments Act. I urge my colleagues to support this timely measure.

This legislation amends the charter of the American Legion to revise eligibility for the organization to those individuals who have served honorably in the Armed Forces during or after specific periods. Presently, service members are only eligible if they have served during a war, including designated windows for World War I, World War II, Korea, Vietnam, Lebanon/Grenada, Panama, and Desert Storm. Because the window governing Desert Storm has not closed, under current law, Desert Storm veterans are not eligible to join the American Legion. This measure corrects this problem.

The American Legion was founded and chartered by Congress in 1919. Its first major accomplishment was the creation of the U.S. Veterans Bureau, which was the precursor to the Veteran's Administration. Significant accomplishments of the Legion include the enactment of the G.I. bill, and the establishment of the cabinet-level department of Veterans Affairs.

The Legion also led the fight for an investigation into the use of Agent Orange in Vietnam, the investigations into gulf-war illnesses among Desert Storm veterans, and for the constitutional amendment to prohibit physical desecration of the American flag.

Like veterans service organizations, the American Legion offers valuable service to its membership, including, but not limited to: seeking discharge upgrades, record corrections, education benefits, disability compensation matters and pension eligibility. The Legion also has a long and distinguished history of community service.

Given our current war on terrorism, I believe it is appropriate for Congress to recognize, expand and promote the efforts of our veterans service organizations. For this reason, I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3214) to amend the charter of the AMVETS organization.

The Clerk read as follows:

AMVETS CHARTER AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3214) to amend the charter of the AMVETS organization.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. AMENDMENTS TO AMVETS CHARTER.

(a) NAME OF ORGANIZATION. — (1) Sections 22701(a) and 22706 of title 36, United States Code, are amended by striking “AMVETS (American Veterans of World War II, Korea, and Vietnam)” and inserting “AMVETS (American Veterans)”.

(2)(A) The heading of chapter 227 of such title is amended to read as follows:

“CHAPTER 227—AMVETS (AMERICAN VETERANS)”.

(b) The item relating to such chapter in the table of chapters at the beginning of sub-title II of such title is amended to read as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chapter</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Location</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>227</td>
<td>AMVETS</td>
<td>Maryland</td>
</tr>

(2) by striking “two national vice commanders” and all that follows through “andinserting—” and inserting “two national vice commanders, a finance officer, a judge advocate, a chaplain, six national district commanders,”.

(c) GOVERNING BODY. — Section 22706(c)(1) of such title is amended by striking “seven national vice commanders” and all that follows through “and insert—” and inserting “two national vice commanders, a finance officer, a judge advocate, a chaplain, six national district commanders,”.

(3) HEADQUARTERS AND PRINCIPAL PLACE OF BUSINESS. — Section 22708 of such title is amended—

(1) by striking “the District of Columbia” in the first sentence and inserting “Maryland”; and

(2) by striking “the District of Columbia” in the second sentence and inserting “Maryland”.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER), for general leave.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 3214, the bill currently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3214 would amend the Federal charter for the American Veterans of World War II, Korea and Vietnam to more accurately reflect the membership of AMVETS. AMVETS membership now includes not only veterans from those three wars, but also anyone who served honorably after 1940, and the National Guardsmen and Reservists.

At the AMVETS annual convention in 1998, the delegates voted for an official name change from American Veterans of World War II, Korea and Vietnam to American Veterans to more accurately reflect the membership. Additionally, AMVETS has voted to change the structure of their governing body. This bill contains language to reflect that structure change in the statute.

Finally, because AMVETS has moved the location of their headquarters from the District of Columbia to Lanham, Maryland, the “Headquarters and principal place of business” section of their charter needs to be changed to indicate that they are now located in Maryland.

In order for these changes to be recognized by the Department of Veterans Affairs, the AMVETS Federal charter must be amended, and this bill does that.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the House to pass H.R. 3214, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the legislation that we have before us, H.R. 3214, would amend the Federal charter of the American veterans of World War II, Korea, and Vietnam to reflect changes made at its 1998 convention. It is extremely important to ensure that we respond to the request of these valiant and heroic servicemen and women.

Their original charter, received in 1947, has been amended by Congress over the years to give membership to Korean War veterans and Vietnam veterans, and to reflect other changing characteristics of the organization.

In 1998, at the AMVETS annual convention, the delegates voted for an official name change of American veterans of World War II, Korea, and Vietnam to “American Veterans” to more accurately reflect the membership of AMVETS. Additionally, AMVETS voted to change the structure of their governing body. The organization also voted to change the location of their headquarters from the District of Columbia to Lanham, Maryland. Therefore, the “Headquarters and principal place of business” section of their charter needs to be changed to indicate that they are now located in Maryland.

In order for these changes to be recognized by the Department of Veterans Affairs, the AMVETS Federal charter must be amended. This bill will accomplish that and allow them to continue to do the service that they do on behalf of the American people and as well to continue to honor the veterans who participate in this organization.

I support H.R. 3214 as it would amend the Federal charter of the American Veterans of...
Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Let me just simply say that today as we stand here on this floor, we have young men and women fighting for us in Afghanistan, young men and women serving in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. This is important legislation, as the previous legislation was, to make procedural changes for our vets; and we honor them as we amend this paragraph.

Mr. SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3214.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS CHARTER AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3838) to amend the charter of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States organization to make members of the armed forces who receive special pay for duty subject to hostile fire or imminent danger eligible for membership in the organization, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. AMENDMENTS TO VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES CHARTER.

(a) Eligibility for Membership of Individuals Receiving Special Pay for Duty Subject to Hostile Fire or Imminent Danger. —Section 230103 of title 36, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking “or” at the end of paragraph (1);

(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting “; or”;

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(3) in an area which entitled the individual to receive special pay for duty subject to hostile fire or imminent danger under section 310 of title 37.”;

(b) Clarification of Purposes of the Corporation. —Section 230102 of such title is amended in the matter preceding paragraph (1) by inserting “; charitable,” before “and educational.”.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER).

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 3838, the bill currently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3838 would amend the Federal charter of the Veterans of Foreign Wars to allow any member of the Armed Forces who received hostile fire or imminent danger pay to be a member of the VFW. The language would allow veterans from conflict areas such as Somalia or Kosovo to be eligible for membership in the VFW.

Currently, VFW membership is limited to those who have honorably served in the Armed Forces and who have received a campaign medal for service or those who served honorably for a specific period on the Korean peninsula.

Without this amendment, members of the Armed Forces who served under equally dangerous conditions, such as those experienced in the campaign medal service in Korea, are not eligible for VFW membership.

The bill also adds the word “charitable” to the purpose of the VFW. VFW members volunteer millions of hours to local communities. Although volunteers have always been a large part of the mission of the VFW, in some States the VFW is being denied qualification as a charitable organization because “charitable” is not included in their charter language.

These amendments reflect the language of two resolutions approved by the voting delegates of the VFW at their national convention in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. I urge the House to pass this bill to ratify the changes to the VFW Federal charter, which have been approved by the membership.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this legislation. This bill amends the Federal charter of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, VFW, to allow any members of the armed services or Armed Forces who have received hostile fire or imminent danger pay to be a member of the VFW, and that is a great honor for so many of our men and women who have served in the United States military.

Without this amendment, members of the Armed Forces who have served under equally dangerous conditions as those experienced in campaign medal service in Korea and in conflict areas such as Somalia or Kosovo are not eligible for VFW membership.

The act also amends the charter of the VFW to include the word “charitable” as one of the purposes. VFW members have provided substantial amounts of time and volunteer efforts of course, this to the community. This will prevent some States from denying the VFW qualification as a charitable organization under 501(c) of the Tax Code simply because the word “charitable” is not mentioned in the charter.

In Texas, there are tens of thousands of members of the VFW. In my district there are thousands of VFW members, and I can assure the Members they are knowledge of the brave men and women who serve us now in Afghanistan, throughout the Nation, and throughout the world.

Mr. Speaker, this bill amends the federal charter of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, VFW, to allow any members of the armed forces who received hostile fire or imminent danger pay to be a member of the VFW. Without this amendment members of the armed forces who served under equally as dangerous conditions as those experienced in campaign medal service in Korea and in conflict areas such as Somalia or Kosovo are not eligible for VFW membership.

The act also amends the charter of the VFW to include the word “charitable” as one of the purposes of the VFW. VFW members have provided substantial amounts of time to volunteer efforts in the communities and to the needy. This will prevent some States from denying VFW qualification as a charitable organization under 501(c) of the Tax Code simply because the word “charitable” is not mentioned in the charter. In the State of Texas, there are ten of thousands of members of the VFW. In my district there are thousands of VFW members. These members provided critical assistance to other veterans, they help raise funds for the March of Dimes, and they provide scholarships to our Nation’s youth.

I urge my colleagues to support this measure, which will simply allow veterans of succeeding conflicts entry into these esteemed veterans organizations. Again, I would be remiss without acknowledging the brave men and women who serve us now in Afghanistan, throughout the Nation, and throughout the world.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, let me just say that just a few minutes ago we have supported H.R. 3988, H.R. 3838, and H.R. 3214, legislative initiatives helping our veterans.

I want to acknowledge and applaud the President for his recent pronouncement of allowing those who are serving in our military to apply for citizenship immediately, without having to wait a period of time previously embodied in our law.

With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, I thank as member of the Subcommittee on Immigration, Border Security, and Claims of the Committee on the Judiciary, I hope that the Congress will move forward.

Mr. Speaker, let me just say that just a few minutes ago we have supported H.R. 3988, H.R. 3838, and H.R. 3214, legislative initiatives helping our veterans.

I want to acknowledge and applaud the President for his recent pronouncement of allowing those who are serving in our military to apply for citizenship immediately, without having to wait a period of time previously embodied in our law.

With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, I thank as member of the Subcommittee on Immigration, Border Security, and Claims of the Committee on the Judiciary, I hope that the Congress will move forward.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, this time I rise to pose some reflections on the VFW. Many people will recall historically that during the Truman years there was an act of terrorism right in this Chamber, when terrorists of a different era shot up the entire Chamber here, wounding several people.

One of the Members of the House at that time was the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Jimmy Van Zandt from Altoona, Pennsylvania, who helped to apprehend one of the terrorists with a gun. The last 50 years or more I have participated as a judge in the VFW’s annual Voice of Democracy contest. Here is a contest of radio-spoken essays by our high school students who speak on what America means to them, our place in the world, and what they have to do with patriotism. In this way, the VFW spreads the notion of loyalty to our Nation, service to our communities, and patriotism. For that, I salute the VFW and urge everyone to support the legislation that is in front of us.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding time to me.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, just let me make it clear, this bill has nothing to do with the immigration law, lest anybody have a misimpression on this. It is legislation that changes the qualification for membership in the VFW, as well as makes the VFW a charitable organization.

Both of these changes were requested by the delegates to the last VFW annual convention that was held in August of last year in my hometown of Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

The best way we can help our veterans, I think, is by not confusing the issue. Let us help our veterans by doing what they asked us to do, which is to allow them to expand their membership, as well as to get some State departments of revenue off their backs so that they can continue to do their very meritorious work.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, as the sponsor of H.R. 3838, I rise to urge all of my colleagues to support this legislation that will amend the Congressional charter of the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW). As Chairman of the Veterans’ Affairs Committee, I was pleased to introduce this bill on March 4, 2002, at the request of the VFW to allow Members of the armed forces who have received hostile fire or imminent danger pay to be eligible for VFW membership.

Mr. Speaker, I want to especially commend the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Mr. SENSENBRENNER; the Committee’s Ranking Member, Mr. CONYERS; the Chairman of the Judiciary Subcommittee on Immigration and Claims; Mr. GEKAS; and the Subcommittee’s Ranking Member, Ms. JACKSON-LEE, for their attention to this matter in moving the bill through the committee and to the floor for House consideration.

This bipartisan amendment to the VFW charter simply allows the organization to keep up with the times as the nature of our Nation’s military operations has changed. The VFW’s charter currently requires a veteran to have received a campaign medal in order to join the organization. But the dangerous contingency operations our servicemembers have participated in over the past twenty or so years have resulted in many armed forces having no combat medals. Servicemembers doing their duty in global hot spots have faced the type of risks that should quality them for VFW membership. My bill would remove this barrier to membership in a way that is consistent with the type of military service they have always required.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3838 would also address a technical problem the VFW has occasionally encountered with the language of its charter regarding its purposes as an organization. The VFW has maintained a tax-exempt, nonprofit status, but some states do not want to qualify it as a tax-exempt charitable organization despite its long history of charitable work in communities across America, because its charter does not contain the word “charitable.” Well, Congress can and should fix this relatively simple problem by inserting the word “charitable” as one of its purposes in order to silence anyone who insists on elevating form over substance.

Mr. Speaker, with roots that go back more than a century to the Spanish-American War, the VFW has an admirable history of helping its fellow veterans, their communities and their Nation. This legislation will help to ensure that the VFW continues to perform these services in the 21st century and beyond. H.R. 3838 deserves the support of every House member and I urge its approval.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 3838, the Veterans of Foreign Wars Charter Amendment act. I urge my colleagues to support this timely measure.

This legislation amends the charter of the Veterans of Foreign Wars Organization to make members of the armed forces who receive special pay for duty that is subject to hostile fire or imminent danger eligible for membership in the organization. This change would allow veterans of operations in Somalia and Kosovo to become eligible for VFW membership.

The VFW is one of the oldest veterans service organizations in the country, and has a long and hallowed history. The VFW was founded in 1899 for soldiers returning from the Spanish-American War and Philippine Insurrection. It was instrumental in creating the Veterans Administration and its subsequent elevation to cabinet level status.

The VFW participates in numerous community service efforts, and assists its members in seeking discharge upgrades, record corrections, education benefits, disability compensation matters and pension eligibility.

Given our current military environment, it is appropriate for Congress to both recognize and promote the efforts of our Veterans Service Organizations. Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. CULBERSON. The question is on the motion by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3838.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 413) honoring the invention of modern air-conditioning by Dr. Willis H. Carrier on the occasion of its 100th anniversary.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. CON. RES. 413

Whereas on July 15, 1902, Dr. Willis H. Carrier submitted designs to a printing plant in Brooklyn, New York, for equipment to control temperature, humidity, ventilation, and air quality, marking the birth of modern air conditioning;

Whereas Dr. Carrier's air-conditioning technology for legislative activity in the House of Representatives Chamber in 1929, and the Senate Chamber in 1929; whereas the air-conditioning equipment in the Senate Chamber today costs $36 billion on a global basis and employs more than 700,000 people in the United States; and

Whereas the year 2002 marks the 100th anniversary of modern air-conditioning; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress honors the invention of modern air-conditioning by Dr. Willis H. Carrier on the occasion of its 100th anniversary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. TIERNEY) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS).

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may revise and extend their remarks on the Concurrent Resolution, H. Con. Res. 413.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the House consider House Concurrent Resolution 413, important legislation introduced by my distinguished colleague (JOHN WALSH of New York). This resolution expresses the sense of the House of Representatives in honoring the invention of modern air-conditioning by Dr. Willis H. Carrier on its 100th anniversary.

Only 1 year after graduating with a master’s degree from Cornell University, Dr. Carrier submitted designs and later installed the first modern air conditioning equipment. Installed in Brooklyn, New York, the air conditioner was designed to control indoor humidity and temperature. When granted a U.S. patent for “the apparatus for removing air,” or what is called in 1906, Dr. Carrier became known as the “father of modern air conditioning.” The formula Dr. Carrier used to develop the modern air conditioner still stands today as the basis for all fundamental calculations for the air conditioning industry.

Air conditioning became the integral technology enabling the advancement of society through improvements to the Nation’s health and well-being. Industries also grew with the new ability to control the temperature and humidity levels during and after production. The invention of air conditioning has also improved areas such as film development, preservation of processed meats, medical capsules, textiles, and other products. In 1901 Carrier received a patent for the centrifugal refrigerating machine that became the first practical method for air conditioning large spaces. This single achievement paved the way for the upward expansion of cities, as well as bringing human comfort to hospitals, schools, office buildings, airports, hotels, and department stores.

Dr. Carrier debuted air conditioning technology for legislative activity in this House in 1929 and in the Senate Chamber in 1929. After World War II, the air conditioner began to be installed in homes across America. According to the Carrier Corporation, 10 percent of American homes were air conditioned by 1965. By 1995, more than 75 percent of American homes were air conditioned; and in some portions of the South, 90 percent of homes have air conditioning or central air systems. Now the air conditioning industry totals a billion homes, a global basis and employs more than 700,000 people in the United States alone.

Mr. Speaker, it is appropriate on this hot summer day that the House recognizes and honors the invention of modern air conditioning by Dr. Willis H. Carrier on its 100th anniversary.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. Walsh).

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague, the gentleman from Connecticut, for yielding time to me, and also the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Tierney) for bringing this resolution to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, as my colleague, the gentleman from Connecticut, pointed out, this Wednesday marks the 100th anniversary of the invention of the modern-day air conditioner by Dr. Willis Carrier, a New Yorker. Today I offer before the House, House Concurrent Resolution 413, recognizing this historic event.

Raised on a farm on the snowy eastern shore of Lake Erie in Angola, New York, the young Carrier grew up as an only child, raised by his grandparents and great aunt. Known for his superior problem-solving capabilities, Carrier would solve every complex problem he encountered by reducing it to its simplest form and solving each component one by one.

He once stated in a high school graduation essay, “A man with the power of will could make himself anything he wished, no matter what the circumstances. These words would define the rest of Dr. Carrier’s life. Carrier entered Cornell University at Ithaca College in Ithaca, New York, on a 4-year scholarship, but he was forced to earn room and board by mowing lawns, stacking furnaces, and during his senior year, forming a co-op student laundry.

With a degree in mechanical engineering, he found a job at the Buffalo Forge Company in 1901 and he began designing heating systems to dry lumber and coffee. Carrier was soon made head of the company’s department of experimental engineering. It was here that he solved his first problem in temperature and humidity control for the Sackett-Wilhelms Lithographing and Publishing Company in Brooklyn in 1902. Marking the birth of modern air conditioning, Carrier’s device controlled temperature, humidity, ventilation and air quality.

In 1915, Carrier and six colleagues pooled together their life savings and founded Carrier Corporation in New York. In 1910 the company bought its first building in Newark, New Jersey and soon found its way back to our Empire State. In 1937 Carrier consolidated five plants on Geddes Street near my home in Syracuse. In 1947 Carrier moved to its present location on Thompson Road in the town of Dewitt, also in my congressional district. Today Carrier Corporation, the company that bears the founder’s name, is a global organization and remains the global leader in providing heating, cooling and refrigeration solutions in more than 172 countries around the world.

As an aside, my colleague from Connecticut (Mr. Shays) will appreciate this. As a Peace Corps volunteer in Nepal, the only night I spent in an air-conditioned room in about 2-and-a-half years was in a Carrier air-conditioned room in Kathmandu, Nepal.

The 34,000 worldwide employees of Carrier Corporation can be proud that they continue to carry on their founder’s tradition of excellence by generating comfort wherever people work, live and play. Many of us take for granted the fact that air conditioning has become an integral technology, enabling the advancement of society through improvements to our Nation’s health and well-being, manufacturing processes, building capacities, food preservation, general productivity and indoor comfort.

From its birth 100 years ago to today’s $36 billion industry, employing 700,000 Americans, we can all be very proud of Dr. Carrier. He did indeed change history. I suspect that if he did not invent air conditioning, we would not be meeting in Washington today because they used to close the Capitol in the beginning of the summer and stay away long until late in the fall. This invention also may have created a tremendous upsurge in the amount of legislation passed by this body, so maybe all is not progress.

The Sistine Chapel in Rome is air-conditioned with Carrier air conditioning. Many great documents of this country are enshrined in museums and the air is conditioned also by Carrier air conditioning. Indeed, this building in which we meet today is also chilled by Carrier air chillers.

In gratitude for all of that, I would ask unanimous support of H. Con. Res. 413 and I ask Members to join me in celebrating this 100-year anniversary.

Mr. Tierney. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise only to say that with Senator Dodd of Connecticut (Mr. Walsh) for bringing this matter before the House; and we, of course, agree that Mr. Carrier has a long and distinguished career and a great invention; and we obviously would support this resolution.

I add only in my memory the one thing we might concentrate on doing is concentrating more on research and develop to improve efficiencies. Through smart public policy we can reduce energy consumption by improving the energy standards and efficiency standards required of common appliances like air conditioners as well as refrigerators, photo copiers and fax machines. I think that would be a great testament to Mr. Carrier’s life and his hard work. If we just applied those standards already on the books in this country, we would be estimated to save consumers some $150 billion in energy costs by 2020. In fact, if we really looked at our research and development monetary investment and realize that they have decreased from $6.55 billion in 1978 to some $2 billion now in 1998.

In 1998 the President’s Committee of Advisors on Science and Technology recommended that our research and development costs over 5 years be increased because right now they are not commensurate in scope or scale with the energy challenges and opportunities of the 21st century and those that they will present.

Again, I also add our voice to the congratulations of Dr. Carrier. I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. Walsh) for bringing this forward and say we look forward to improving the efficiencies of technology. We will know and realize that we continue to do better and better by our energy consumption.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the invention of modern air conditioning has clearly changed our country. Modern air conditioning fueled the post-war growth of sunbelt cities such as Miami, Phoenix, Las Vegas and Houston. The invention of modern air conditioning also led to the building of glass skyscrapers, shopping malls and pressurized modules for space exploration.

On this, the 100th anniversary of the invention of modern air conditioning, we truly honor Dr. Willis H. Carrier. Mr. Speaker, I urge all Members to support this concurrent resolution.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Concurrent Resolution 413, offered by Mr. MALIK, marking the centennial of Dr. Willis H. Carrier’s invention of modern air conditioning. I can think of no better place to recognize this accomplishment than in the House Chamber—first air-conditioned by Dr. Carrier in 1929—on a 90 degree July day.

For the past century, Carrier air conditioning and refrigeration systems have been keeping our offices and homes cool. The man responsible for this phenomenon is Carrier’s founder, Dr. Willis Haviland Carrier. Born on a farm in Angola, New York in 1876, the only child had a humble upbringing yet possessed high hopes from the start. At the time he could not have known the worldwide impact his invention would create. It would boost industrial production, change the face of urban architecture, including providing comfort cooling to some of the world’s most prestigious buildings. It would improve health care for millions. It would allow unimagined industries to flourish.

Today, Carrier Corporation, the company that bears the founder’s name, is an $8.895 billion organization providing heating, cooling and refrigeration solutions in more than 172 countries around the world. The nearly 43,000 worldwide employees of Carrier Corporation create comfort wherever people work, live or play—from private residences and apartments to grand hotels; from sprawling factories to soaring office towers; from theme parks to centuries-old cultural centers. Overall, the air conditioning industry totals $36 billion and employs more than 700,000 people in the United States.

One hundred years later, we benefit now more than ever from Dr. Carrier’s invention. I urge my colleagues to pass the Resolution.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERTSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, H. Con. Res. 413.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CLARENCE MILLER POST OFFICE BUILDING

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4755) to designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 204 South Broad Street in Lancaster, Ohio, as the Clarence Miller Post Office Building.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4755 Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the United States Postal Service located at 204 South Broad Street in Lancaster, Ohio, shall be known and designated as the “Clarence Miller Post Office Building”.

SECTION 1. CLARENCE MILLER POST OFFICE BUILDING.

(a) Designation.—The facility of the United States Postal Service located at 204 South Broad Street in Lancaster, Ohio, shall be known and designated as the “Clarence Miller Post Office Building”.

(b) Representation.—In a law, map, regulation, document, paper, or other record of the United States to the facility referred to in subsection (a) shall be deemed to be a reference to the Clarence Miller Post Office Building.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. TIERNEY) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 4755, this pending consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4755, introduced by our distinguished colleague from the State of Ohio (Mr. HOBSON), designates a post office in Lancaster, Ohio as the Clarence Miller Post Office Building.

Members of the entire House delegation from the State of Ohio are cosponsors of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, this post office will recognize former Congressman Clarence Miller and his 5 decades of public service to the citizens of Lancaster, Ohio. Among Congressman Miller served as a city councilman, mayor and U.S. representative. Born in Lancaster on November 1, 1917, Clarence Miller served 13 terms as a United States Congressman, from 1967 until 1993. Prior to his term in Congress, he was mayor of Lancaster from 1964 to 1966 and a member of the Lancaster City Council, 1957 to 1963.

Congressman Miller originally made his living as a utility company engineer before entering into public service.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of H.R. 4755.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of a Committee on Government Reform, I am pleased to join my colleague in consideration of H.R. 4755. The bill in fact to designate a facility of the United States Postal Service after Clarence Miller. Obviously the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HOBSON) has introduced this bill. It enjoys great support, from my understanding, from the entire Ohio delegation. Not having been a Member of Congress when Mr. Miller was in fact serving, I do know that by reputation he served from 1966 until January of 1993. He was the former Representative Miller served on the Committee on Agriculture, Committee on Public Works and Transportation, and the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, on the 3 subcommittees of that group. He was well known as a budget watchdog because of his fierce dedication to fiscal responsibility.

Former Representative Miller is now retired but he is also active in his Lancaster community. He is a member of the First United Methodist Church, the recipient of numerous awards and honors in recognition of his untiring efforts to serve his fellow Ohioans.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the swift passage of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HOBSON).

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask for the House to approve the bill to deem the Lancaster, Ohio, post office for former congressman Clarence J. Miller to recognize his years of public service to the citizens of Lancaster, Ohio.

Clarence Miller served the people of Lancaster and central Ohio for over five decades and for thousands of Ohioans, he exemplified the proper role of a public servant.

Clarence was a true community leader who was committed to improving the lives of those he represented, whether it was in the Lancaster City Hall or the United States Congress. His vision and civic spirit have made lasting contributions to our area, and he truly deserves this honor.

Mr. Miller was born in Lancaster on November 1, 1917. After graduating from Lancaster public schools and receiving technical training in Scranton, Pennsylvania, Mr. Miller was employed as a utility company engineer.

He served as a member of the Lancaster City Council from 1957 to 1963 and as mayor of Lancaster from 1964 to 1966. In 1967, he was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives where he served until his retirement in 1993.

In Congress, Mr. Miller first served on the Committee on Agriculture and Committee on Public Works and Transportation. In 1973, he became a member of the House Committee on Appropriations and served on the Subcommittee on Foreign Operations; Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, State; Subcommittee on Treasury, Postal Service and General Government; and Subcommittee on Defense.

Clarence also holds U.S. and Canadian patents for technical innovations he developed in his professional ability as an electrical engineer.

There are many in Congress and in Washington today with fond memories of former Congressman Miller; but there is no one who was committed to improving the lives of those he represented, whether it was in the Lancaster City Hall or the United States Congress. His vision and civic spirit have made lasting contributions to our area, and he truly deserves this honor.
of Clarence Miller. This legislation would provide a lasting tribute to this fine individual that would be most visible to those he served for so many years in Lancaster, Ohio.

I might say that Mr. Miller today lives in Lancaster, Ohio. He visits the office often and still takes part in trying to help make our community better.

So it is with deep appreciation that I thank the House for passing this piece of legislation today.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of this measure.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, as an original cosponsor of H.R. 4755, I rise in strong support of this bill to designate the post office in Lancaster, Ohio as the Clarence Miller Post Office Building. This building served as Clarence’s district office while he served the people of Southern Ohio for 26 years as a member of the House of Representatives.

Clarence Miller is a native and lifelong resident of Lancaster, Ohio. He was born on September 24, 1917. He was the third of six children born to Clarence Miller, Sr., and Delores Lloyd Miller. He married his high school sweetheart, Helen Brown, on December 25, 1936, and they spent 50 happy years together until her passing in 1986.

Clarence has two children, Jacqueline and Ronald. He has five grandchildren, Tyler Williams, Todd Williams, Amy Jackson, Jennifer Smith, and Drew Miller, and four great-grandchildren—Morgan, Connor, Drew, and Grant. His family and friends worked to help provide them with a better appreciation of the world.

He has a surviving brother, Paul, a retired mechanical engineer. While continuing to work full time at Ohio Fuel, Clarence and his brother, Paul, along with their mother, started Miller Electric, a small retail and electric wiring business in Lancaster.

Clarence grew up during the Great Depression. He was the son of an electrician. Clarence and his brothers and sisters worked to help the family financially during those troubled times, and as a young boy he delivered papers for the Lancaster Eagle Gazette.

During high school he unloaded trucks after school at the Ohio Fuel, often not returning home until after midnight, and then rising early the next morning to attend classes.

Clarence always prided himself on being a self-made man. Following high school he went to work digging ditches for the Ohio Fuel and Gas Co., now called Columbia Gas, and rose through the ranks to become a practicing electrical engineer. While continuing to work full time at Ohio Fuel, Clarence and his brother, Paul, along with their mother, started Miller Electric, a small retail and electric wiring business in Lancaster.

Clarence first became interested in politics in the 1950s when the Ohio Fuel and Gas Co. offered him a job in its employ in 1954. This paid $1,500 a year, and Clarence quickly realized the importance of politics in helping to provide them with a better appreciation of how government operates. Clarence found the subject so captivating that he himself started teaching those courses, and afterwards began thinking about entering politics.

His political career began in 1957, when he was appointed to an unexpired term as a member of the Lancaster City Council. He was elected to a full term, and then was elected mayor of Lancaster, receiving the largest plurality in the history of the city.

Clarence was first elected to the House of Representatives in 1966 and was elected each succeeding Congress by wider margins. Clarence and President George Herbert Walker Bush were members of the same freshman class. For six years Clarence served on the House Agriculture Committee and the Public Works and Transportation Committee, and then he was selected to serve on the powerful Appropriations Committee where he served for the next 20 years. Clarence was noted for his efforts to reduce federal spending during times of overwhelming deficits. He originated the idea of offering 2-percent across-the-board reduction amendments to appropriations bills, which became known as the Miller Amendments.

Clarence always had a keen interest in technology, and was one of a handful of Members of Congress who has earned United States and Canadian patents for technical innovations developed while he worked as an electrical engineer. Clarence successfully merged his technical background with his work in Congress. In 1977 he was appointed by the Speaker to be a member of the Technology Assessment Board of the Congress.

Clarence received many honors and awards including: honorary doctorate degrees from Marietta College in Marietta, Ohio, and Rio Grande College in Rio Grande, Ohio; the Phillips Medal of Ohio University; the National Associated Businessmen’s “Watchdog of the Treasury Award”; the Americans for Constitutional Action’s “Distinguished Service Award”; and the National Rifle Association’s “Legislator of the Year Award.”

He always took great pride in his work. He was not one to seek the public limelight. Clarence worked quietly and diligently over the years for our nation and for his constituents. He always said it is not important to get your name in the Washington Post or on the network news. Instead, he looked after the people who sent you here to represent them, and to do what they think is best for the country as a whole.

Apparently Clarence’s philosophy served him well, because he consistently defeated his opponents over the years by a better than 2-to-1 margin.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members to vote for H.R. 4755 to honor Clarence Miller, a gentleman who served the people of Southern Ohio and our Nation very well in this chamber for 26 years.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question was taken.

The Speaker pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4755.

The question was taken.

The Speaker pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Speaker pro tempore. The Speaker pro tempore. The last hitter to bat over .400, Ted Williams, approached that endeavor like anything else in his life, never taking a shortcut. Batting over .380 but rounded off to .400 going into the last two games of the 1941 season, Ted took to the field and went six for eight in a double header on the last day of the season, raising his average to .406, the last player to hit over .400. He led the American league in batting six times, slugging percentage nine times, and total bases six times, and runs scored six times. He won two triple crown titles and was named Most Valuable Player of the league twice. He was also named to the All Star Team 16 times. Yet Ted’s love of country and duty to serve took him away from the game twice, once during the Second World War and again during the Korean War.

During the Korean War, he flew 39 combat missions and earned an Air Medal and two Gold Stars. During his baseball career Ted had always hoped that people would see him and refer to him as the greatest hitter who ever lived. He was the greatest hitter that ever lived. But today this House recognizes Ted Williams as a Navy aviator, a Marine, and a great American who exemplified dedication and sacrifice in absolutely everything he did.
Mr. Speaker, I urge all Members to support this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. SHAYS. I want to just make one point: Some of the points that my esteemed colleague from Connecticut made, who has to travel a little bit further to Fenway Park than some of us who live in Massachusetts. The points he made are worth noting, but we also have a number of young people in the House today observing this particular proceeding, and I hope that what they take away from this even more so than the feats accomplished on Fenway Park and on the baseball fields around this country are the facts that Ted Williams served his country in the military, as the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) said, on two occasions. When he left the baseball field first was for World War II and, secondly, for the Korean Conflict. He served his country nobly there and was a hero and continued on beyond that. Even after he finished his baseball career, he provided invaluable assistance to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and to others through his work and service for the Jimmy Fund, helping to eradicate cancer in children.

So for all the good deeds he did in baseball, he was a rounded individual who served this country, who has continued to serve his fellow man in a humanitarian way, with very serious issues of health. Besides that, he had some fantastic eyesight, a great athletic ability, was a terrific fisherman, and probably was the greatest hitter to ever live.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY), an individual who is better known around the House of Representatives for his fowl shooting percentage, more so than his batting average, the plan of the Massachusetts delegation, and a great baseball fan.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. TIERNEY) for introducing this resolution, and I thank the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) for helping organize this tribute to Ted Williams.

As has already been said, he served 5 years in the military, 3 years in World War II, 2 years in the Korean war, each of those years at the prime of his baseball career.

We in Boston and many across the country believe that if he had not been forced because of the need to protect our country to actually play those five seasons that he would hold the record in just about every single offensive category of baseball statistics. That is how great a hitter he was. The amazing thing is that even though he missed 5 years, he is still near the top in so many of the important baseball categories.

When I was a boy growing up in Malden, Massachusetts, playing baseball for 3 or 4 or 5 hours a day, the one thing that I did at night was to lie there at night trying to go to sleep, dreaming of myself as Ted Williams, trying to hit Whitey Ford or Bob Turley or another Yankee pitcher because we knew that of all of the people who we could call upon in order to protect us against the hated Yankees that Ted Williams was at the top of the list. And not only did I go out and hit as Ted Williams with that perfect swing, but I am sure that there were millions of others having the very same dream about their own baseball aspirations.

He not only was a great baseball player and a great patriot, but he was also a great fisherman. He is in the Fisherman’s Hall of Fame. He, for over 50 years, was the living embodiment of the Jimmy Fund which is a fund which has been created up in Boston at the Fenways. It is not global, its reach which helps to treat cancer in children, which was his passion.

A lot of people say that Ted Williams reminds them of John Wayne; but in reality, John Wayne only played those parts in movies. John Wayne wishes he was Ted Williams, wishes that he had had the life, the career, the success that he had had in every single endeavor that he touched in his life.

If somebody says 406, everyone knows that Ted Williams hit for batting average in 1941. There are so many things that we could talk about here today; but at bottom, this was a great man, a great American and someone who is deserving of all of the praise which he is receiving across this country, and I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for yielding me the time.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, we have no other speakers, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. Again, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY) for introducing this resolution and working so hard to bring it to the floor. Frankly, when he speaks, no one else needs to.

I also thank the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON), chairman of the Committee on Government Reform, and the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN), the ranking member, for expediting its consideration. I ask all Members to support this resolution to express our condolences on Ted Williams’ death and honor his awesome life and achievements.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 482 to honor and recognize the life of baseball legend Ted Williams. I would like to extend my condolences of Ted Williams’ death and honor his awesome life and achievements.

Mr. LARSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 482 to honor and recognize the life of baseball legend Ted Williams. I would like to extend my condolences on Ted Williams’ death and honor his awesome life and achievements.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague Mr. SHAYS for sponsoring H. Res. 482 honoring the great Ted Williams.

Ted Williams—the Splendid Splinter—dominated baseball throughout the 1940s and 50s. As the Boston Red Sox left fielder, he batted a lifetime .344, batted in 1,839 runs, had 2,654 hits, and hit 521 home runs. Throughout this time, he won two Triple Crowns. However, it is his season batting average of .406 in 1941 that will forever live in the hearts of all baseball fans. No other player has hit over .400 for a season since.

Yet, if one asked Mr. Williams what he was most proud of in his life, he would say it was the time he spent fighting for this great nation. Mr. Williams spent five years—in the prime of his life and his baseball career—fighting in World War II and in the Korean War. Many of us wonder how many more hits Williams would have had, had he not dedicated his life to the Navy and the Marines. And people throughout New England will remember Ted Williams for all the charitable work he performed for children.

Ted Williams played 19 seasons with the Red Sox, 19 summers in Fenway Park. In a city where baseball is more than just a pastime, Ted Williams is an icon. A tunnel running
Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 482, legislation that honors one of baseball's finest players, and one of America's finest citizens, Ted Williams. I also want to commend the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MARKEY for offering this fitting resolution.

Mr. Speaker, Ted Williams was respected by his peers, admired by his successors, and adored by his fans. His work-ethic was second to none, and he toiled day in and day out, dreaming that one day people would see him as they did Mickey Mantle, 'and realize where goes the greatest hitter who ever lived.'

His wiry frame and pure talent earned him the nickname "The Splendid Splinter," and Ted Williams never failed to live up to that reputation on the field.

Williams is best remembered for batting .406 in 1941. In the sixty years since that tremendous season, no one has approached the milestone.

The 1941 season typified Williams' supreme devotion to the sport of baseball. Before the final day of the season, Williams had secured a .406 batting average. Yet he refused to sit out that day's double-header, playing both games and batting 6 for 8, raising his average 6 points.

Ted Williams' dedication to the game of baseball was evident as he continued to excel at an age when most players would have hung up their cleats. At the age of 40, he added his sixth and final batting title to his long list of accomplishments, becoming the oldest player to ever lead the league in hitting.

Williams was also a master of dramatic finishes, as he closed out his career in Fenway Park with a home run in his last at bat. It was a fitting end for Boston's greatest and most beloved baseball player of all time.

While Teddy Ballgame will always be remembered as a baseball player, some of his greatest accomplishments came off the field. Williams' devotion to baseball was matched only by his devotion to his country. He acted as a true role model and hero during a time of war, sacrificing three years of his prime to serve in the United States Marines in World War II from 1943–1945. Seven years later, he again left the baseball diamond to serve his country, this time in Korea during the Korean War. And even though his time in the military undoubtedly cost him some of his best playing days, he never regretted his service. In fact, Williams often counted his enlistment as a Marine as one of his greatest accomplishments.

In addition to his heroic sacrifices as a Marine, Williams will be remembered as the first Hall of Famer to have the courage to insist upon the inclusion of Negro League stars in the Baseball Hall of Fame, which is located in Citrus Hills. The event brought plenty of celebrities to the area, such as Joe DiMaggio, Muhammad Ali and Bob Costas, who served as master of ceremonies.

The Museum would have an incredible effect on tourism in the area—something Ted Williams did for Citrus County in my district, where he lived from the mid-1980's until his passing earlier this month.

As most of you know, Mr. Williams was a fabulous fisherman, and he first came to Citrus County in 1950 for that reason. However, it wasn't until over 30 years later that he began to leave his mark on the County.

In 1982, Mr. Williams was named a marketing consultant for the Citrus Hills residential development, lent his name to the project and, most importantly, moved to the County shortly afterward. This helped bring thousands of transplanted New Englanders who followed his playing career to retire in Citrus County.

Mr. Williams put Citrus County in the national spotlight in 1984 with the opening of the Ted Williams Museum and Hitters Hall of Fame, which is located in Citrus Hills. The event brought plenty of celebrities to the area, such as Joe DiMaggio, Muhammad Ali and Bob Costas, who served as master of ceremonies.

The Museum would have an incredible effect on tourism in the area—which continues to this day. Despite his failing health, Mr. Williams appeared before 2,000 fans at the Museum's yearly hall of fame induction ceremony in February.

Everyone in Citrus County—baseball fans or not—had tremendous pride in the fact that one of the world's greatest baseball players lived in the area. However, he wasn't just a great ballplayer—he was a great American, and he left his mark on Citrus County.

The last day of the 1941 season, Mr. Williams went 4 for 4 and was given the opportunity by his manager to sit out the game in order to preserve this monumental achievement. Of course, he did not sit, and finished going 6 for 8 in both games of a double-header.

Ted Williams would continue that dedication when he arrived in Citrus County. Indeed, the last player to bat over .400 batted 1.000 in Citrus County.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 482.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 482) congratulating the Detroit Red Wings for winning the 2002 Stanley Cup Championship.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. Res. 482. Resolved, That the House of Representives—

(A) the Detroit Red Wings for winning the 2002 Stanley Cup Championship and for their outstanding performance during the entire 2001–2002 National Hockey League season; and

(B) all of the 16 National Hockey League teams that played in the postseason; and

(2) recognizes the achievements of the Red Wings players, coaches, and support staff who worked hard and were instrumental in bringing the Stanley Cup back to the city of Detroit;

(3) commends the Carolina Hurricanes for a valiant performance during the playoff finals and for showing their strength and skill as a team; and

(4) directs the Clerk of the House of Representatives to transmit an enrolled copy of this resolution to—

(B) Head Coach Scotty Bowman; and

(C) the President and team owner Mike Ilitch.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) that the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Tierney) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS).

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to review and extend their remarks on H. Res. 482.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.
Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 452, introduced by our distinguished colleague from the State of Michigan (Ms. KILPATRICK), congratulates the National Hockey League’s Detroit Red Wings for winning the Stanley Cup for the third time in 6 years. The entire House delegation from the State of Michigan are cosponsors of this legislation.

Last month, the Detroit Red Wings defeated the Carolina Hurricanes in just five games to win the Stanley Cup Finals, thus bringing the title back to, as the writer says, Hockeytown. En route to the finals, the Red Wings beat last year’s Stanley Cup champions, the Colorado Avalanche, to clinch the Western Conference title.

The Red Wings’ roster features such NHL superstars as team captain Steve Yzerman, Brett Hull, Sergei Fedorov, Chris Chelios, and goalie Dominik Hasek.

I would specifically like to congratulate Detroit Head Coach Scotty Bowman for his impressive leadership this season and throughout his frankly awesome career. Coach Bowman has been with the team since 1993, and he has guided the Red Wings to three Stanley Cup championships, including back-to-back wins in 1997 and 1998. Bowman is retiring from the NHL and thus closing out a truly remarkable career, during which he set many coaching records including a record nine Stanley cup championships during his tenure with the Montreal Canadiens, the Pittsburgh Penguins, and now with the Detroit Red Wings.

Mr. Speaker, for these reasons, I urge adoption of House Resolution 452.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise to also support House Resolution 452 for consideration this afternoon. Indeed, all the things that the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) has already mentioned are on my list of comments to make here on behalf of the gentlewoman from Michigan (Ms. KILPATRICK) and the other members of the Michigan delegation who, unfortunately, could not be here this afternoon to bring this matter forward and speak to it.

I do think it takes note again for the young people that are here that this is not just winning and losing in hockey game, but more about the hard work and determination and teamwork that goes into a championship effort; and for that, the Red Wings are certainly to be congratulated for the skill, tenacity, and dominance with which they finished the regular season and then clinched the President’s trophy.

They have done a great job. They deserve all the credit. For a Boston Bruins fan like myself, it is always difficult that once again the Stanley Cup slipped away, but it went to a team that had a great year, was a very deserving; and we want to make sure that everybody acknowledges this important feat as well as the hard work of Mr. Bowman as the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) said, the team captain and other players there.

The whole delegation, I am sure all of Michigan, take great pride in the work that this team and the effort that they have made.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I think it says something that a Boston Bruins, one of the original six, and a New York Rangers fan are saluting the Detroit Red Wings. They have been an awesome team, remarkable players, and truly outstanding coach; and I will just say that given that some Members have not had the opportunity to speak, with some trepidation, I am going to ask for a rollcall vote and know that my House Members from different hockey towns will have the good nature and goodwill to make this a unanimous resolution.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN), and we are honored to have in this body today a member of this body who takes great pride in being from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my friend from Massachusetts yielding me the floor.

I just want to say a few words about the Red Wings as someone who has been a fan for quite a few years. The Red Wings are for Michigan more than a hockey team, and I think that is the secret.

A lot of us do care they are a successful hockey team. Some of us go back to the days when we played and there were not any indoor rinks. Some of us who are Red Wings fans used to fool around with hockey on ponds, and sometimes when the weather was not long enough, falling in while we were playing hockey.

But as I said, the Red Wings really are much more than a hockey team and that has been especially true under the ownership of Mike and Marian Ilitch. They understand what sports mean to Detroit and the whole metropolitan area in the State. They also understand, though, that sports can mean something more than just who wins and who loses.

And the Red Wings, I think, have such wonderful following because, especially under the Ilitches, and the coaches there, led by Scotty Bowman, there has been continuity. We have come to know the players. I must say, on some teams, the players change so much every year, it is hard to identify with them. But that has not been true of the Red Wings.

The team that won the championship and the Stanley Cup really melded together and became a family, taking in new members, and I think that gave us a sense of community and a sense, if I may say so, even of family. When Vladi Konstantinov was seriously injured, everybody rallied around him. And it is always a moving few moments when he reached the team for the last time.

So I just wanted to come to the floor and to say, in tribute to the Red Wings, many thanks to all of the players, led by Steve Yzerman, the captain; to all of the coaches, led by Scotty Bowman; and to the entire Ilitch family, for an awesome team, remarkable players, and truly outstanding coach. This wonderful group won the Stanley Cup, but they really also won the hearts of a lot of us in Michigan.

And if I daresay, as I close, to all my colleagues who have not been in the Detroit metropolitan area recently, there are more Red Wing flags flying from cars than you will see such flags anywhere else in America. If we who are candidates for office had just one of the flags that fly from the cars supporting the Red Wings, we could never lose an election. The Red Wings may be a Stanley Cup contest in future years, but they won it again this year and all of us from Michigan are very, very proud of them. And I thank the House for bringing up this resolution of congratulations.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume to thank the gentleman from Michigan for his very thoughtful comments, and to say whether you are a Bruins fan or Ranger fan, like Mr. TIERNEY and me, you can still be very happy to support this important resolution honoring the Detroit Red Wings.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the entire Detroit Red Wings organization for winning the championship on June 13, 2002, and collecting their 10th Cup by defeating the Eastern Conference Champion Carolina Hurricanes. After 82 games, followed by perhaps the most grueling playoff setup in professional sports, the Red Wings proved once again that talent and experience could triumph over more youthful competition.

Marian and Mike Ilitch, the owners of the Red Wings and community leaders in Detroit, have once again returned Lord Stanley’s Cup to “Hockeytown,” where it rightfully belongs. I would like to thank the Ilitch family for their dedication to the city of Detroit, State of Michigan, and to all Red Wing fans.

Red Wing fans are indebted to retiring head coach Scotty Bowman, who has brought the Red Wings to the playoffs 7 times in the last 8 years, won three Stanley Cups in the past 6 years, and who, this past season, has earned his ninth Stanley Cup victory, surpassing his mentor Toe Blake for the most championships in National Hockey League history. This is truly an amazing accomplishment, and I wish him well in his retirement.

Finally, I express my congratulations to the Red Wing players for their incredible season, and for showing all of us how to perform under great pressure. I applaud the hard work.
and dedication which made this victory possible, and would offer my personal appreciation on behalf of Michigan’s 16th Congressional District, to Captain Steve Yzerman, Brett Hull, Igor Larionov, Brendan Shanahan, Lue Robitaille, Sergei Fedorov, Darren McCarty, Chris Chelios, Niklas Lidstrom, Dominik Hasek, Kris Draper, Jim Fisher, Jesse Wallin, Uwe Krupp, Mathieu Dandenault, Pavel Datsyuk, Ladislav Kohn, Kirk Maltby, Boyd Devereaux, Fredrik Olausson, Steve Duchesne, Jason Williams, Maxim Kuznetsov, Manny Legace, Jason Eliott, Sean Avery, Jiří Sgier, and Tomas Holmstrom.

With the recent signing of Curtis Joseph and re-signing of Chris Chelios, I look forward to seeing another Stanley Cup Parade in Hockeytown next year!

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in congratulations of the 2001-2002 Stanley Cup Champion Detroit Red Wings.

Although history will be the final judge, the Detroit Red Wings have already been considered one of the greatest hockey teams ever assembled. Led by the winnigest coach in NHL history, a team made up of truly great players—more than half a dozen prospective Hall of Famers and a rookie class with seemingly limitless potential—the Red Wings are a team that is greater than the sum of its parts. If there is one thing that can be said about the team, it’s that they could never be counted out.

Throughout the year and the playoffs, the stars stepped up and led when leadership was needed, and when the veterans had difficulties, the rookies came through when it really mattered. Under Scotty Bowman, the Red Wings came together with an offense as quick and precise as the surfin’ Chipmunk, and a defense as tenacious as the octopus that we in Michigan know as Garrett Island. They embody the values of teamwork, discipline and dignity, and their involvement with the community has brought it together. For our young people becoming passionate about the sport of hockey, they couldn’t look up to a better group of players.

And so I would like to thank my colleagues in congratulating the Detroit Red Wings for their Stanley Cup victory. This team has guts, determination and finesse. Sports Illustrated has called them the New York Yankees of Hockey, but I’m not so sure that’s appropriate. They’re the Detroit Red Wings of Hockey, and that speaks volumes more.

Ms. KILPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Representatives for bringing up H. Res. 452, a resolution that I, along with support from the Michigan delegation, introduced congratulating the Red Wings on a tremendous year that culminated in winning the 2002 Stanley Cup Championship.

As a native Detroiter, I am so proud of the Red Wings for bringing the Stanley Cup back to the City of Detroit and the State of Michigan. They showed true heart, dominance, skill, and tenacity throughout regular and post-season play in the National Hockey League. More importantly, they showed all of us that anything is possible with hard work, determination, and a strong team spirit. The Red Wings are true champions.

Thank you to head coach Scotty Bowman, who led the Red Wings to their third Stanley Cup under his leadership, with the back to back wins in 1997 and 1998. I wish, Mr. Bow- man, “the Winningest Coach in Hockey,” all the best in his retirement and thank him for all that he has brought to this great sport. Congratulations to President and team owner Mike Ilitch and his wife, Marian, who have shown steadfast support for the team and the City of Detroit and have been owners of the Red Wings franchise since 1982. Their commitment to the team and the City rings true every day.

For all hockey fans out there and for anyone that knows even a little bit about hockey, clinching the Stanley Cup is no easy feat. The Red Wings went through four grueling playoff rounds and defeated four very competitive and skilled teams to win the Cup, including the 2001 Stanley Cup Champions, the Colorado Avalanche in the Western Conference finals, and the valiant Carolina Hurricanes in the Stanley Cup finals.

The Red Wings faced strong opposition, but showed their true grit and skill every step of the way, getting stronger as each playoff series progressed. The Red Wings contributed to the team’s success. Deservedly, each player will have his name engraved on the Stanley Cup, which is considered to be the most coveted sports trophy in North America.

I would like to thank my Michigan colleagues for cosponsoring this resolution. We congratulate the Detroit Red Wings on an awesome year. Way to go Red Wings! Hockeytown is proud.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the entire Detroit Red Wings organization for winning the 2002 Stanley Cup on June 13, 2002, and collecting their 10th Cup by defeating the Eastern Conference Champion Carolina Hurricanes. After 82 games, followed by perhaps the most grueling playoff setup in professional sports, the Red Wings proved once again that talent and experience could triumph over more youthful competition.

Marian and Mike Ilitch, the owners of the Red Wings and community leaders in Detroit, have assembled a great team and brought Stanley Cup to “Hockeytown,” where it rightfully belongs. I would like to thank the Ilitch family for their dedication to the city of Detroit, State of Michigan, and to all Red Wings fans.

Red Wings fans are indebted to retiring head coach Scotty Bowman, who has brought the Red Wings to the playoffs 7 times in the last 8 years, won three Stanley Cups in the last 6 years, and, who, with this year’s victory, has earned his ninth Stanley Cup victory, surpassing his mentor Joe Blake for the most championships in National Hockey League history. Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

BLACKWATER NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE EXPANSION ACT

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4807) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire the property in Cecil County, Maryland, known as Garrett Island for inclusion in the Susquehanna National Wildlife Refuge, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4807

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representa- tives of the United States of America in Congress assembled.

TITLE 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “Blackwater National Wildlife Refuge Expansion Act.”
SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

(1) Garrett Island, located at the mouth of the Susquehanna River in Cecil County, Maryland, is a microcosm of the geology and geography of the region, including hard rock piedmont, coastal plain, and volcanic formations.

(2) Garrett Island is the only rocky island in the tidal waters of the Chesapeake.

(3) Garrett Island and adjacent waters provide high-quality habitat for bird and fish species.

(4) Garrett Island contains significant archaeological sites reflecting human history and prehistory of the region.

SEC. 3. AUTHORITY TO ACQUIRE PROPERTY FOR INCLUSION IN THE SUSQUEHANNA NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE.

(a) Acquisition.—The Secretary of the Interior may use otherwise available amounts to acquire the area known as Garrett Island, consisting of approximately 198 acres located at the mouth of the Susquehanna River in Cecil County, Maryland.

(b) Administration.—Lands and interests acquired by the United States under this section shall be managed by the Secretary as the Garrett Island Unit of the Blackwater National Wildlife Refuge.

(c) Purposes.—The purposes for which the Garrett Island Unit shall be established and shall be managed are the following:

(1) To support the Delmarva Conservation Corridor Demonstration Program.

(2) To conserve, restore, and manage habitats as necessary to contribute to the migratory bird populations prevalent in the Atlantic Flyway.

(3) To conserve, restore, and manage the significant aquatic resource values associated with submerged land adjacent to the unit and to achieve the habitat objectives of the agreement known as the Chesapeake 2000 Agreement.

(4) To conserve the archeological resources on the unit.

(5) To provide public access to the unit in a manner that does not adversely impact natural resources on and around the unit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST) and the gentlewoman from the Virgin Islands (Mrs. CHRISTENSEN) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST).

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I am pleased to present this legislation to the House of Representatives to expand the boundaries of Blackwater National Wildlife Refuge, which is located in my Congressional District in Maryland.

Garrett Island, which consists of approximately 198 acres, was the site of Maryland's second settlement in the 1600s. It is the only rocky island in the tidal waters of the Chesapeake Bay system. It is an important and necessary inclusion to the Chesapeake Bay watershed ecosystem, here in Maryland, a magnificent island corridor, Garrett Island being one of those facilitating other ecosystems that will be included, and so I urge not only my colleagues to vote aye on this legislation, but I also urge the Interior Department, when they are visiting the island, to recognize those varied opportunities.

The United States often sends biologists, zoologists, ornithologists, you name it, to vast areas of the world to study ecosystems. We have in our back yard, here in Maryland, a magnificent Chesapeake Bay watershed ecosystem, and this island can be one of those facilities that will be included in what could be known as an island corridor in the Chesapeake Bay so that people from the University of Maryland or the Baltimore Zoo or the Baltimore Aquarium, or other universities and community colleges and even high schools do not have to travel to Brazil or South America or regions of Africa to show their interns or their students the kinds of ecosystems that make communities drive. They can send them to the island corridor, Garrett Island being the jewel of that concept.

So I urge my colleagues to vote for this legislation. I also want to thank the gentlewoman from the Virgin Islands for her support and the staff for their work on this legislation.

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.

Mr. Speaker, on this side have no objection to this legislation that would authorize the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to acquire Garrett Island for its future inclusion as part of the Blackwater National Wildlife Refuge in Maryland.

Certainly the protection of the last undeveloped island in the lower reach of the Susquehanna River is a positive step toward preserving the remaining fish and wildlife habitat found near the headwaters of the Chesapeake Bay.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has voiced some minor reservations concerning the legislation, as we have just heard. These concerns are mostly due to the administration's ongoing effort to reevaluate current land acquisition policies governing the refuge system. However, the technical changes made to the bill, I think, will help to address these minor concerns. And the relatively low cost of acquisition should warrant a new assessment of Garrett Island by the Fish and Wildlife Service. The island is deserving of the service's full and unbiased consideration.

H.R. 4807 is a noncontroversial bill. I also urge all Members to support this legislation to help protect fish and wildlife habitat in the Chesapeake Bay.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, to mention just one.

There is a family in Cecil County, the Kibbys, that live and work on a dairy farm, and they have been strong supporters of the concept of Garrett Island being included in the National Wildlife Refuge system. There are broad and varied opportunities for this island to be included, and so I urge not only my colleagues to vote aye on this legislation, but I also urge the Interior Department, when they are visiting the island, to recognize those varied opportunities.

The Chesapeake Bay Foundation had it right when they wrote that steps must be taken to ensure protection of this largely unspoiled historical and geological gem. I would urge my colleagues to vote aye on H.R. 4807. This is an important and necessary inclusion in our National Wildlife Refuge system, which will celebrate its hundredth birthday next year.

This is exactly the type of place that Teddy Roosevelt had in mind when the system of public lands was created. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, we on this side have no objection to this legislation that would authorize the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to acquire Garrett Island for its future inclusion as part of the Blackwater National Wildlife Refuge in Maryland.

Certainly the protection of the last undeveloped island in the lower reach of the Susquehanna River is a positive step toward preserving the remaining fish and wildlife habitat found near the headwaters of the Chesapeake Bay.

I want to applaud the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST) for his leadership on this subcommittee on this and many other issues.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has voiced some minor reservations concerning the legislation, as we have just heard. These concerns are mostly due to the administration's ongoing effort to reevaluate current land acquisition policies governing the refuge system. However, the technical changes made to the bill, I think, will help to address these minor concerns. And the relatively low cost of acquisition should warrant a new assessment of Garrett Island by the Fish and Wildlife Service. The island is deserving of the service's full and unbiased consideration.

H.R. 4807 is a noncontroversial bill. I also urge all Members to support this legislation to help protect fish and wildlife habitat in the Chesapeake Bay.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, to mention just one.

There is a family in Cecil County, the Kibbys, that live and work on a dairy farm, and they have been strong supporters of the concept of Garrett Island being included in the National Wildlife Refuge system. There are broad and varied opportunities for this island to be included, and so I urge not only my colleagues to vote aye on this legislation, but I also urge the Interior Department, when they are visiting the island, to recognize those varied opportunities.

The United States often sends biologists, zoologists, ornithologists, you name it, to vast areas of the world to study ecosystems. We have in our back yard, here in Maryland, a magnificent Chesapeake Bay watershed ecosystem, and this island can be one of those facilities that will be included in what could be known as an island corridor in the Chesapeake Bay so that people from the University of Maryland or the Baltimore Zoo or the Baltimore Aquarium, or other universities and community colleges and even high schools do not have to travel to Brazil or South America or regions of Africa to show their interns or their students the kinds of ecosystems that make communities drive. They can send them to the island corridor, Garrett Island being the jewel of that concept.

So I urge my colleagues to vote for this legislation. I also want to thank the gentlewoman from the Virgin Islands for her support and the staff for their work on this legislation.

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4807, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read:

“A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire the property in Cecil County, Maryland, known as Garrett Island for inclusion in the Blackwater National Wildlife Refuge.”.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.
HONORING AMERICAN ZOO AND AQUARIUM ASSOCIATION

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 408) honoring the American Zoo and Aquarium Association and its accredited member institutions for their continuous animal welfare, conservation education, conservation research, and wildlife conservation programs.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress recognizes and honors the American Zoo and Aquarium Association and its member institutions of zoological parks and aquariums for their dedicated service in animal welfare, conservation education, conservation research, and wildlife conservation programs.

Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST) and the gentlewoman from the Virgin Islands (Mrs. CHRISTENSEN) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST).

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, founded in 1924, the American Zoo Association is a nonprofit organization dedicated to the advancement of zoos and aquariums. AZA institutions draw over 135 million visitors annually and have more than 5 million aquariums and zoos members. These institutions teach more than 12 million people each year. This affords the AZA facilities a huge opportunity and responsibility to instruct the public on the need to protect and conserve the wonders of the natural world.

Collectively, AZA member institutions draw over 135 million visitors each year. This affords the AZA facilities a huge opportunity and responsibility to instruct the public on the need to protect and conserve the wonders of the natural world.

The wide variety of public education and interpretive programs made available through AZA institutions admirably fulfills this mission, and I applaud the AZA for their important work towards developing the next generation of wildlife conservationists.

In closing, H. Con. Res. 408 is non-controversial, and I urge its adoption by the House.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from the Virgin Islands and the staff on both sides of the aisle for supporting this legislation in recognizing all of those people, whether it is a tiny zoo in Cecil County, Maryland, or Salisbury, Maryland, or the magnificent aquarium in Baltimore, Maryland, to zoos and aquariums all across this country by trying to understand, and doing a pretty good job of it, of understanding the nature of the magnificence of where people fit into the natural environment on this blue planet.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the subcommittee for the gentleman’s leadership and the work he has done to accommodate the needs and unique considerations of the territories as we work on the Committee on Resources. We have no members of AZA, but we do have National World in St. Thomas, and I am hoping at some point in the near future they will be a member of this wonderful organization.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the Virgin Islands is a beautiful place in the Caribbean; that is its own AZA.

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBerson). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, H. Con. Res. 408.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CELEBRATING 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF CONSTITUTION OF COMMONWEALTH OF PUERTO RICO

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 395) celebrating the 50th anniversary of the constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. CON. RES. 395

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress celebrates the 50th anniversary of the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST) and the gentlewoman from the Virgin Islands (Mrs. CHRISTENSEN) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST).

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Con. Res. 395. The gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN), the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. RAHALL), and Resident Commissioner ANIBAL ACEVEDO-VILÁ worked together to compose this non-partisan and status-neutral resolution celebrating the 50th anniversary of the constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

H. Con. Res. 395 celebrates the 50th anniversary of this important historical event in our Nation’s history by listing some highlights Puerto Rico’s local constitution went through in becoming adopted. The resolution is non-controversial, and I ask Members to join me in its support.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.
Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he might consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO).

(Mr. SERRANO asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. Speaker, I rise with utmost respect for my colleagues and with some sadness in my heart because I rise in opposition to this resolution. I do so because in our profession, perception is a strong weapon. And the perception of this weapon or the result will be that we are in fact celebrating the relationship between Puerto Rico and the United States. While that relationship has had some wonderful moments, it has never stopped, in my opinion, being a colonial relationship. In fact, I do not think the Congress should at this moment or at any other moment celebrate and encourage continued colonial relationships. Now, why do I believe that Puerto Rico is a colony of the United States? Because while citizenship has been granted since 1917, the same rights as other American citizens have not been granted to the American citizens who live in Puerto Rico. I often startle some of my colleagues by reminding them that this was to move back to Puerto Rico right now, we could not serve in Congress with a vote, we could not vote for Members of Congress, we could not vote for the President, or have full representation. Citizenship supposedly would stay intact. I find it very difficult to do what I am doing, but I think it needs to be done so we can continue once and for all to do a political discussion over Puerto Rico and the United States. Rather than celebrating and promoting that status, should not the 4 million American citizens of Puerto Rico know that the only option real to them is not the present option, but the option of statehood or independence? Most importantly and most urgently, we must move forward to put an end to this colonialism that shames both our Nation and Puerto Rico and brings indignity to the over 4 million fellow citizens living in Puerto Rico.

Mr. Speaker, I come to this discussion as a person who feels emotion on both sides. I grew up in New York City since I was a little boy coming from Puerto Rico. I was born in Puerto Rico. I grew up in a State called New York. I know the dignity and strength and value of being a State. I grew up in an independent Nation called the United States. I know the dignity and strength of that. That is all I ask for the place I was born there only. I approach it as a Member of the United States Congress who, looking at the Caribbean, says today, 2002, 104 years later, Puerto Rico should no longer be a colony of the United States.

I respect my colleagues, and I know that their intent is to celebrate the relationship. However, I have some problems with the relationship. Statehood or independence, that is the way to go.

(Mrs. CHRISTENSEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume to the gentleman and his sentiment on this issue.
Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I do want to say that the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. ACEVEDO-VILA) asked us to propose this resolution for the 50th anniversary of the constitution of Puerto Rico with the full intent of giving the people of Puerto Rico a great deal of dignity. It is about that we are discussing this issue here this afternoon.

I urge my colleagues to vote “aye” on the resolution.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, while I do not have any objections to this resolution, it does not paint the complete picture regarding the status of Puerto Rico. H. Con. Res. 395, does not represent the views of the majority of our fellow citizens in Puerto Rico.

It is important that my colleagues are aware that most of our fellow citizens in Puerto Rico and many of our citizens of Puerto Rican descent do not share the sentiments of this resolution. Many of our constituents do not support continuation of Puerto Rico’s current political status.

The constitution enshrined Puerto Rico’s status as a U.S. territory. Its approval attempted to legitimize the status, but it was controversial from the start. This subject to many is visceral, and several years ago nationalistic rhetoric was so enraged by this divisive issue that they fired shots in this very chamber. Their violence was unjustified and reprehensible, and world events clearly show that resorting to violence to have your voice heard does not advance one’s cause. Advocates of the constitution were disappointed with the final result of an effort that was intended to enable Puerto Ricans to choose a permanent, non-territorial status as well as draft a local constitution. It only accomplished the latter goal. In fact, the counsel to the governor at the time who had a significant role in the arrangements, whereby Puerto Rico is subject to the laws of Congress but cannot vote in it.

In 1917 Congress approved the Jones Act, conferring the US citizenship to all Puerto Ricans. While citizenship has always been and remains cherished by Puerto Ricans, the Jones Act did not provide increased local rule or a democratic process through which the people of Puerto Rico could exercise their right to self-determination.

While the Jones Act included a bill of rights, the central principle of a democratic system—consent by the governed—was non-existent in Puerto Rico. Puerto Rico was therefore treated at this time like a colony. For decades, the Puerto Rican people struggled to achieve self-determination, and democratic rule. After World War II, the colonial regime founded under the Jones Act began to disintegrate apart from Puerto Rico and in Washington. In 1948 Puerto Rico’s claim for democracy, by enacting the Elective Governor Act. This statute provided for the election, every 4 years, of the governor of Puerto Rico by the people of Puerto Rico. There years later, with Public Law 600 of 1950, Congress began a process through which the people of Puerto Rico would exercise their right to self-determination by drafting their own constitution. It is important to note that Congress did not impose this Act upon the people of Puerto Rico, but rather it made an offer to Puerto Rico. Its approval was for conducting a referendum. The Act provides: “This Act shall be submitted to the qualified voters of Puerto Rico for acceptance or rejection through an island-wide referendum to be held in accordance with the laws of Puerto Rico. Upon the approval of this Act by a majority of the voters participating in such referendum, the Legislature of Puerto Rico is authorized to call a constitutional convention to draft a constitution for the said island of Puerto Rico.”

Puerto Rico accepted the offer and a constitutional convention drafted the new constitution and in March 1952, the people of Puerto Rico ratified it. Months later, the President signed Public Law 447, approving the Constitution of the Commonwealth. In that Joint Resolution, Congress expressed that Public Law 600 had been approved “as a compact with the people of Puerto Rico.” Finally, in July 25, 1952, Governor Luis Muñoz Marín proclaimed the Constitution of the Commonwealth.

This Constitution established a republican form of government, provided for a broad Bill of Rights that followed not only the US Constitution but also the Universal Declaration of the Rights of Man. This Constitution also provided for the election of all members of the legislature by the people.

As expected, democratic rule, paved the way for cultural growth and economic development. After 1952, under the Commonwealth status, Puerto Rican culture flourished, and a stronger sense of identity grew. Our symbols were brought back to our flag, our anthem, etc. The Constitution allowed Puerto Ricans to fully and freely express their identity and their pride. Moreover, under Commonwealth, our economic foundations have grown stronger and the relationship has been very beneficial for both Puerto Rico and the United States. Today Puerto Rico consumes more U.S. goods per capita than any jurisdiction in the world and represents the 9th largest market for U.S. goods in the world.

In 1999, Puerto Rico purchased $16 billion worth of US products, which translates into over 320,000 jobs in the mainland U.S. Today I want my colleagues to recognize that Puerto Rico purchases more from the U.S. than much larger countries such as China, Italy, Russia and Brazil.

Clearly the Commonwealth Constitution has served well the people of Puerto Rico and the status of Commonwealth has benefited the United States.

While the Commonwealth alternative has won every referendum held on the Island since 1952, the issue of Puerto Rico’s status is not settled. It is actually a highly divisive issue. As the representative of Puerto Rico in Congress I will continue working to make sure that the will of the people of Puerto Rico is heard and respected in Washington, and to make sure that any petition to improve the Commonwealth be provided.

Notwithstanding the current debate of status in Puerto Rico, there is no doubt that the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico represents the greatest democratic achievement of the Puerto Rican people, in the 20th century. It is this historical achievement that we celebrate on July 25th.

The Commonwealth is the result of the pragmatic genius and the progressive spirit of a great generation of leaders in Puerto Rico and in the United States. I quote President Harry Truman on April 22, 1952, regarding the approval by Congress of the Puerto Rican Constitution: “The Commonwealth of Puerto Rico will be a government which is truly by
I also want to commend the gentleman from Puerto Rico, Mr. ACEVEDO-VILA, for his diligence in bringing this measure to our attention, and working to have it considered by the House of Representatives in a timely fashion. During my tenure in Congress, I’ve come to appreciate the passionate deliberations over Puerto Rico’s future political status. Anyone who is familiar with this history will recognize how studious one must be in crafting legislation, or otherwise, that makes mention of Puerto Rico’s political status. In this regard, I offer my deep appreciation to Mr. ACEVEDO-VILA for collaborating with both Chairman HANSEN and myself to compose a nonpartisan and status-neutral resolution recognizing this milestone for Puerto Rico.

It is times such as this occasion that we are given good cause to step back and appreciate all that the relationship between Puerto Rico and the United States has meant to each other over the years. The U.S. has benefitted from Puerto Rican achievements in business, the arts, government, and athletics. More importantly, the U.S. has been enriched by Puerto Rican history, culture, and language. I would also emphasize the in time of war the people of Puerto Rico have also shed their blood in defense of the United States of America.

For her part, Puerto Rico has capitalized on the access to economic opportunities provided to her from the U.S. relationship. The result of this, being a prosperous economy and society. The relationship will be perfected. The determination of the people of Puerto Rico will make it so. I have a special fondness for the people of Puerto Rico. I have found them to be a hard working and diligent people with deep passions. Today, I congratulate the people of Puerto Rico on this anniversary and encourage my colleagues to support this measure.

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

PRAYER
The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, strong source of strength for those who stretch the human limits and go beyond, we praise You for courage to stand firm for truth as You have revealed it to us. Give us convictions that require Your courage. We know that courage is fear that has said its prayers. Here we are, Lord, relinquishing any fears that may cripple us in being bold leaders. We can take hold of courage because You have given us power to overcome rather than overreact. We accept the admonition of the psalmist: "Wait on the Lord, be of good courage, and He shall strengthen your heart. Wait, I say, on the Lord."—(Psalm 27:14).

Bless the women and men of this Senate as You solidify their convictions and then give them the gift of courage. You are our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE
The Honorable Jon S. Corzine led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

important issue specifically to Wyoming, the Yellowstone National Park. In a broader sense, it is an issue that affects all kinds of parks and Federal public lands. It has to do with the question of access to these lands. Particularly, I am very interested in national parks, having grown up just outside of Yellowstone. I served as chairman of the National Parks Subcommittee for a long time. So I am very interested in parks.

We are in the process of working on an issue that I think has broader implications. It is the ability to use snow machines to see Yellowstone National Park in the wintertime. It is something that has been done, of course, for a number of years, and certainly there have to be changes that take place with use, and, as people are involved, unfortunately, those changes have not taken place as much as they should. Now we find ourselves in a dilemma with efforts made to eliminate the opportunity for people to use these machines in the wintertime.

As I mentioned, I think the purpose of the park is to maintain the resource, and all of us would agree to that. It is one of the national treasures that we have. It is a part of the American heritage, and we should establish new parks and so on.

The second purpose of having a park, of course, in addition to saving the resource, is to give the opportunity for the public to enjoy it— the people of America. And of course it needs to be done in an orderly way so there is not a problem with destroying those resources.

As I mentioned, snow machines in Yellowstone Park have been used for a good number of years. They are limited to the roads that are prepared for snow machining. You cannot go off the road; you stay on those roads. That has been the rule through the years. They enter by going in three or four entry ways that come into Yellowstone Park, which is fewer than there are in the summer.

Of course, the wildlife remains in the park in the winter, for a good part of the time at least, and so one of the problems or complaints has been that the idea of preparing the roads for the use by snow machines provides an exit for the buffalo, and they go into Montana. There are concerns about brucellosis, and so on, and they don’t like to have them there.

The fact is that the roads are going to be prepared for use, whether visitors can use them or others, because they have to be used by the rangers and the people who are in the park. In any event, this issue kind of came to a head about 2.3 years ago when the Clinton administration had prepared a regulation that there would be no more use of snow machines in the wintertime. Well, many of us do not agree with that. We think there can be ways in which snow machines can be managed so that they can be changed if they need to be, that would take away the problems of that exit, and rather than to eliminate them, we think there ought to be a way to change them.

Indeed, during the course of this time, there have been a number of changes being made, partly by the manufacturers. Of course, there can be a regulation and a standard as to how the machines would be allowed to reduce emissions they have had in the past. They would also reduce the noise, which has been something people have been concerned about.

So we want to establish this— and the manufacturers are prepared—to go into the market with machines, probably four-cycle engines rather than two, that would change both the emissions and the noise.

As this went on, of course, as the Clinton administration pushed their regulation, there were lawsuits brought. Then there was a change in the administration. The original EIS that was done was extended, and we took an additional year to extend the open period for another couple of years, and another supplemental EIS was held so there could be some additional alternatives.

The alternative, of course, could be: Continue it is now; eliminate it entirely; allow for coaches rather than individual snow machines; or change the rule so there could be some combination of the two.

The time is down now pretty close to where there would be, in this month, as a matter of fact, a reestablishment of the options that would be available, any favored option by the administration.

I met recently with the superintendents of the two parks, both the Grand Teton and Yellowstone, and they are prepared to do that. I think they are prepared to favor the option that would allow for the changes to be made in the machines and also for additional noise, but of course potentially have limitations on the numbers that could travel. It is kind of interesting because those who oppose it, of course, do not want to include any machines, regardless of the situation. There are now machines that have less emissions than an automobile. There are only about 600,000 of these machines and 1.6 million cars in the summer, so it is quite hard to figure out how they are going to do extensive damage.

As I mentioned, there was a lawsuit. The snowmobile manufacturers, the State of Wyoming, and others brought a suit over the ban last summer. The settlement was agreed to. It called for a supplemental EIS, which I mentioned, which now has been against it called for some reasonable and commonsense resolutions and changes to the debate.

The public process has been open. There have been lots of responses. Because the environmentalists organized the way that they had more against it, they send in a card to those who were for it, but those who really took time to examine the issue and come up with alternatives, that was pretty evenly divided between those who want to continue and those who do not.

We are down now to making some decisions, and I think that is what we ought to do, and we are in this process. My colleagues and I are involved in this decision, and then suddenly we decide we are going to make the decision here. I hope that is not the case. I think we have had, as I said, an opportunity, and we can continue to talk about it and we ought to certainly let that process work its way through, which I think it will.

Everyone is for the protection of our parks. We all want to do that, and we can do that. We have had this sort of a problem in public lands, where you have to get a balance of usefulness and protection, and we can do that.

We are into another thing now on limiting roads in the forests. Obviously, there ought to be some limitations, but there also ought to be access. It is not only access to people who want to hunt or do those kinds of things. I have received lots of communications from veterans, for instance, who say: Gosh, I cannot hike 5 or 10 miles to get there.

So we have to find a balance, and this is one of the areas in which a balance is necessary—not the only one. But I am saying that our resources of public lands and public uses also have to have access for a number of reasons. It also is an economic issue for people who live around the parks, as we do in Wyoming. So we hope we can go ahead with this and that the administration will continue to pursue the idea of having a regulation that provides for management, provides for protection, but provides people an avenue to still continue to enjoy the park.

I thought it was kind of interesting that one of the complaints about the noise—and I understand that—is people who go there do not want to have noise in the wintertime. Well, there is nobody there unless they go on machines because there is no place they can go without them. It is too far away. I think I would raise that point. I feel very strongly about it, of course, as do many of us.

We certainly hope we can go on through this process and end up with an alternative that allows for the use of visitors to Yellowstone Park in the winter. It is a beautiful place. When one goes up there by Old Faithful and goes up the river, talk about the wildlife. One of the things that is sort of interesting is you drive along and if you want to stop, then you have a bald eagle right beside the road in about 2 or 3 feet of snow, and they move right along in this little place pushing the snow out of the way so they can eat what is left.
A little history will show this is not the first attempt to solve the crisis of the Ninth Circuit. I believe the need for change, however, has never been greater. The Ninth Circuit has grown so large and has drifted so far from prudent legal that sweeping changes are in order. Congress has already recognized that the change is needed. Back in 1997, we commissioned a report on structural alternatives for the Federal court of appeals. The commission was chaired by the former Supreme Court Justice, Byron R. White. They found numerous faults within the Ninth Circuit. In its conclusion, the commission recommended major reforms and a drastic reorganization of the court.

This legislation divides the Ninth Circuit into two independent circuits. The new Ninth would contain basically California. I understand there is an interest from Nevada to stay with California. Basically, we propose to leave the Ninth Circuit as it is. A new Twelfth Circuit would be composed of the following: Arizona, Alaska, Hawaii, Idaho, Montana, Oregon, Washington, Guam, and the Northern Marianna Islands. Immediately, I think the concern of the White commission would be addressed. A more cohesive, efficient, and predictable judicial group would emerge.

The circuit serves a population of more than 54 million, almost 60 percent more than are served by the next largest circuit. By 2010, the Census Bureau estimates that the population of the Ninth Circuit will be more than 63 million people. How many people does this court have to serve before the Congress of the United States realizes the Ninth Circuit is overwhelmed by its population? Congressional Members are not alone in advocating a split.

In 1973, a congressional commission on the revision of the Federal Court Appellate System Commission, commonly known as the Hruska Commission, recommended the Ninth Circuit be divided. Also that year, the American Bar Association adopted a resolution in support of the split. In 1990, the U.S. Department of Justice endorsed legislation to split the Ninth Circuit in a surprising reversal of the official "no position" approach it had previously assumed. That is significant in relation to the collegial standing. It is a fact in the White commission on the need for splitting the court.

In 1995, a bill was reported from the Senate Judiciary Committee to go ahead and split the Ninth Circuit. There were objections. Most of those objections came from California and were simply based on the theoretical concept that California has been the headquarters of the Ninth, and there is a certain amount of prestige associated with having the largest court, so it is just not a concept that could be such a response from California. But it was not necessarily based on what is good for justice.

Mr. President, today I want to talk about the corporate scandals and financial problems we have been experiencing, and discuss how these problems highlight the importance of keeping the "security" in Social Security.

Last week, American financial markets plunged dramatically in response to the ongoing litany of corporate scandal and earnings restatements. The New York Times called the current 2½-year slide in the stock market the "worst bear market in a generation." For ordinary investors, retirees, and near-retirees—last week, and certainly the year—the post-bubble environment was a financial nightmare. What felt like a hard-earned, secure retirement for many became an open question filled with uncertainty for many.

In conclusion, while I may believe even more sweeping changes are in order, I strongly urge that this body address the crisis in our judiciary system. It is the 54 million residents of the Ninth Circuit who suffer from our inaction. These Americans wait years before their cases are heard, and, after those unreasonable delays, justice may not even be served by an overstretched and out of touch judiciary.

Congress has known about the problem in the Ninth Circuit for a long time. Justice has been delayed too long. The time for reform has come. I urge action on this legislation. I will be offering it on every bill until we obtain a vote on this issue.

I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

Mr. CORZINE. Thank you, Mr. President.

Americans. People are feeling compelled to go back to work and evaluate when they will retire, continue their careers, or cut back on their standard of living. They are experiencing a real sense of economic insecurity.

U.S. equity markets have lost nearly $7.5 trillion since the peak of the market—that is a mind-boggling number, frankly—and roughly $2.5 trillion in market value has been lost this year alone.

That loss has created a profound sense of insecurity among American families. We are seeing it in the real economy, we are seeing it in consumer confidence, and in a whole series of measures.

Trees don’t grow to the sky. We sometimes lost track of that in the 1990s. Markets will not fall to zero either. But markets pose real risk and real challenges to the economic security of all Americans. That is, of course, why we must pass the accounting reforms before the Senate, the investor protection Act. I hope we will do that today. We must also stand firm on the principles and elements of this legislation as we continue in the conference committee, which will try to piece together this strong piece of reform legislation with a fairly weak and tepid response in the House.

Obviously, investors are deeply affected by the wave of corporate scandals and financial restatements that infect even some of the corporate world. The so-called Enron Syndrome, WorldCom, Global Crossing, to Adelphi—the litany goes on, and, unfortunately, appears to be lengthening. I think we may just be at the head of this wave.

What we have is not merely a few bad apples but a systemic breakdown—a breakdown in our accounting system, a breakdown in our auditing structures, and, more fundamentally, a breakdown in the trust that is the foundation of our entire market-based economic system—trust in our corporate leadership, trust in the truthfulness of their word.

As a former businessman and a CEO, I must say I am ashamed of this wave of corporate corruption. As a Senator, I am appalled at the continuing attempts of some lobbyists and too many in public office to substitute a token response for a strong and effective governmental response.

Frankly, I am disappointed with President Bush’s response last week, which was long on rhetoric and short on reform. Nothing was really said about the accounting industry conflicts, the conflicts with regard to search in investment banks, as Attorney General Spitzer has brought to light, the expensing of options, or about many other serious steps that will be needed to restore public confidence.

The President also failed to face up to the urgent need for major strengthening of the SEC, which today is drastically outgunned in the battle against corporate fraud. We need not define the SEC by who is leading the SEC, but we need to make sure we speak to the scope of the resources they have and the tools they have to deal with the issues that are involved in problems that have led to the crisis of consumer confidence.

Many of my colleagues have expressed similar concerns in recent days, and I believe the American people are watching us closely today, and will see how this process unfolds as the Senate and the Housecomplete their work, and whether we can put this strong reform legislation on the President’s desk not only by passing a strong bill in the Senate but by making sure that when we get to conference, we put the public’s interest ahead of special interests.

With that said, there is another very important question that is reinforced by these events. It is really where the dots connect and what I will focus on today. There have been a lot of people speaking about often here on the floor—the implications of a market meltdown and the President’s drive to move toward the privatization of Social Security.

For any company that has any doubt about the importance of providing a guaranteed safety net—a bedrock safety net—for America’s retirees, recent events prove how that is absolutely necessary. In just the last few weeks, millions of Americans have lost a degree of their 401(k)s plunge dramatically. For some, this decline will mean their retirement will have to be delayed. For others already retired, it will bring a real decline in their standard of living. I have read about and talked to people who will have to return to work. And for millions of Americans, recent events have highlighted the risk of relying on the stock market as the primary guarantor of retirement security.

We have always talked in this Nation about a three-legged stool to support people in their retirement: Certainly, individual savings, and some of that undoubtedly is well spent in the stock market; then there are pension benefits that are provided by employers; and then there has always been this bedrock of Social Security. That is the three-legged stool.

I think we need to make sure we reinforce that fundamental leg. Social Security is to ensure, despite the inherent uncertainties of the marketplace, that retirees who have contributed to our Nation will be guaranteed a basic level of retirement income. In other words, the Social Security system guarantees a degree of certainty, a certainty that will give people that sense of security.

Privatizing the program, as the Bush Social Security Commission has proposed, will undermine that security and tear apart a program that has been successful, enormously successful—for the American people for over 70 years. In fact, we have gone from where we had more than 50 percent of the American population retired and living in poverty down to almost 10 percent in recent years. In my view, moving away from that would be a mistake.

For 50 percent of working Americans, the whole of their retirement security is Social Security; that is why it is critical that we maintain the integrity of retirement security. And for about 70 percent, the primary means of their retirement security is Social Security. So we are really talking about putting at risk something that I think is very vital for most Americans.

Proponents of privatizing Social Security would compound those defined-benefit contribution or 401(k) market risks by making Social Security benefits equally dependent on the uncertainties of the stock market. That would be a cruel betrayal of America’s senior citizens and a denial of the promise of Social Security.

Consider what has happened to the employees at MCI. MCI is another telecommunications company that was merged into WorldCom about 2½ years ago. Before the takeover by WorldCom, MCI maintained a traditional defined-benefit plan; that is, the retirement security risks were borne by MCI and guaranteed by a Government corporation called the Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation. But that plan was abolished after WorldCom merged, except, by the way, for senior management; they continued to have defined-benefit programs for their retirements.

Instead, MCI’s employees, as most WorldCom employees, were offered only one type of retirement program, a 401(k) plan.

I am not against 401(k) plans. They are a great idea for an additional element on top of Social Security, a guaranteed benefit. But I think when we mix apples and oranges, we undermine economic security for Americans.

By the end of 1999, over 103,000 workers and retirees participated in this WorldCom 401(k) program. Their accounts at that time held more than $1.1 billion of WorldCom stock, about one-third of the plan’s assets. At that time, the stock was worth $54 a share.

Today, that stock and the retirement funds are almost worthless. And we read in the paper today that WorldCom is about to file its bankruptcy petitions. After WorldCom’s massive accounting scam, the stock is not at $54 a share but 3 cents a share. The WorldCom stock in WorldCom 401(k) plans is not worth $1.1 billion, but it is now worth $20 million.

By the way, the 401(k) plan isn’t guaranteed by the Pension Guaranty Corporation. It is actually imposing a cruel reduction in the security of all those 104,000 folks. I say, as an aside, this situation certainly argues for diversification in pension plans as well. The WorldCom plan started out about one-third concentration in WorldCom stock. It now has less than 1 percent in the WorldCom stock, but that is just because of the loss of value. It is really a very difficult situation for a lot of working Americans.

These are not just numbers or abstract entries on a corporate balance sheet or somebody’s notification of what their 401(k) plan returns are, they represent the destruction of people’s hopes for a secure retirement life, after working responsibly and contributing responsibly to their retirement.

Last week we had one WorldCom employee say: I put all my money in WorldCom stock, and I’m pretty sure I’ve lost everything. I knew what happened at Enron, but I thought we [at WorldCom] were different.

Management told them they were different, and, as most people, employees trusted the executives they worked for and wanted to be proud of their company and its leadership.

The experience of WorldCom employees, and those of hundreds of other companies—some of them, by the way, not falling prey to the whims of fraud but just simply market realities—shows that diversification is an absolute essential in pension reform. I hope we have that debate also on the floor.

When retirees lose all their money through the carelessness of their own, when nothing is left in their retirement portfolio, one thing, and one thing only, stands in the way of total economic devastation. Social Security. Because no matter the state of the stock market, Social Security is always there—not with enough to live in luxury but enough to make a real difference for millions who have little or no savings on which to rely. Social Security is the ultimate safety net. We must not let the administration rip it out.

Privatization schemes would irresponsibly gamble with the guarantee of security for retirees, present and future. The average Social Security benefit last year was only about $10,000 a year—not the princely sums received by executives who have failed their companies—and not enough in some parts of our country to have a secure retirement. In New Jersey, for instance, $10,000 a year can only get you so far given the high cost of living in our part of the country. Yet President Bush’s Social Security Commission called for substantial cuts in guaranteed benefits. Cuts for some workers would amount to 25 percent and future cuts could exceed 45 percent. If anyone wants to apologize for privatization by disputing these numbers, I just encourage them to read the report of the nonpartisan actuaries at the Social Security Administration themselves. For just one example, let me refer you to the recent economic analysis by Professor Peter Diamond of MIT and Dr. Peter Orszag of the Brookings Institution.

The Bush Commission parades its proposals on promoting choice. But if the Bush privatization plans were ever approved, seniors would have no choice. Their benefits would be cut. They would be cut if they shifted to privatized accounts, and they would be cut if they did not. The only choice is this: If they opted for privatized accounts, their guaranteed benefits would be cut more deeply.

The effective destruction of Social Security’s guaranteed benefits recapitulates a bad choice. The Bush Commission is bad economics and bad social policy.

Fifty Senators have written the President urging him to publicly reject his Commission’s proposals. So far, his response has been the same kind of silence we heard for months after the corporate scandals first broke with Enron.

Sometimes facts and reality ought to bring about a change in thinking for individuals, for corporations, and for an administration on important topics of the day.

Cutting guaranteed Social Security may have sounded like a good idea when the stock market was only going up, but now the fallacy of that assumption is clear to everybody. I hope the Bush administration will reconsider its plans to privatize and cut Social Security.

Let’s not take the security out of Social Security.

Mr. President, before I leave the floor, I would like to take a few minutes to discuss a different matter but one that I believe is fundamentally important as we seek to address the structural problems facing our economy and what we need to face in the financial world to straighten out some of the problems we have. We need to get better account for employee stock options.

This, too, is an issue that regardless of where, one may have been historically, facts and reality ought to bring about a change in reasonable folks’ thought with regard to options.

While the depth of liquidity and efficiency of our markets is still unrivaled, our markets need to make sure they are based on a presumption of integrity and accuracy in the information provided to the country. Our entire financial system depends on the broad availability of timely, truthful and transparent information. To secure that and to retain the confidence of investors, it is absolutely urgent that we address this treatment of employee stock options.

The fact is, in many instances where we continue to allow this without an acknowledgment of what is going on, two things are happening: Earnings are overstated, and there is an enormous amount of dilution going on to the ownership share of investors. And, for that reason, we must not let this happen.

People may argue that you can derive this from financial statements and footnotes that are highly complicated even for the most sophisticated investor to read. But I argue that there is no common sense in making it difficult to understand what the earnings statements of a company state and, more importantly, protecting investors from the dilution that comes from the whole premise of issuing more stock without having an understanding of what is going to happen.

This needs to be put in the context of the asymmetrical incentives it gives management that has undermined confidence in our corporate executives.

To be brief: We have a chance to address this issue in a very serious manner in the next few hours before we take our final vote on this legislation, I compliment Senator LEVIN and all those who stand to straighten out and put into responsible for what needs to be done with option accounting. We should do that not by writing option rules, at which I do not think the Senate has the capacity to be effective, but make sure that an independent body, which we will independently finance, has the ability to deal with a very complicated issue.

I hope with the help of all my colleagues, we can get around to straightening out something that we saw today in news reports, even corporate executives understand can lead to overstatement of resources and certainly misunderstanding of the performance of companies. We ought to get real economic performance being reflected, not accounting performance. I am glad to see Coca-Cola take the steps they did. We need to move firmly and surely by passing the Levin amendment which would facilitate a solution that would make this permanent for everyone.

All three of these are important issues—accounting reform and corporate responsibility, the treatment of stock options, and protecting Social Security and rejecting privatization. The stakes are high for our economy. I hope we will move swiftly and certainly to reform and provide economic security to all Americans.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

PUBLIC COMPANY ACCOUNTING REFORM AND INVESTOR PROTECTION ACT OF 2002

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of S. 2673, which the clerk will report.
The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2673) to improve quality in financial reporting and independent audits and accounting services for public companies, to create a Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, to enhance the standard setting process for accounting practices, to strengthen the independent audit of public companies, to increase corporate responsibility and the usefulness of corporate financial disclosure, to protect the objectivity and independence of securities analysts, to improve Securities and Exchange Commission resources and oversight, and for other purposes.

Pending:

Edwards modified amendment No. 4397, to address rules of professional responsibility for attorneys.

Reid (for Carnahan) modified amendment No. 4286 (to amendment No. 4187), to require timely and public disclosure of transactions involving management and principal stockholders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Michigan, Mr. LEVIN, is recognized.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I wonder if I might inquire as to how much time I have for my allotted time under postcloture rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 36 minutes remaining.

Mr. LEVIN. I thank the Chair.

I would ask unanimous consent that the pending second-degree amendment be laid aside so I can offer a germane second-degree amendment relative to stock options.

My amendment, which is at the desk, would direct the independent accounting standards board to review the accounting rule on stock options and adopt an appropriate rule within 1 year.

It should not be necessary to seek unanimous consent. The whole purpose of our postcloture rules is to allow those of us who have germane amendments such as this one to offer that amendment, to have it voted on. It is a frustrated clear intent of our rules to not allow germane amendments to be voted on after cloture is invoked.

We have a strict rule. It is called cloture. It ends debate. When cloture was invoked, I had pending an amendment, which would have given the Securities and Exchange Commission greater powers to impose civil fines administratively. It is an important addition to SEC powers. They now have that power, but they don’t have it over corporate directors. They don’t have it over corporate managers. They ought to have the power to impose civil fines administratively—subject, of course, to appeal to the court—relative to corporate directors and corporate officers.

That amendment, as relevant as it is to this bill, was frustrated when cloture was invoked and when all the time up to that vote was utilized so that my S.E.C. amendment was not allowed to come up for a vote.

Now we are in postcloture. Now we are under postcloture rules. The question is whether or not the intent of those rules is going to be carried out, which is to allow those of us who have germane amendments to have a vote on those amendments.

The amendment on which I would like to have a vote cannot be voted on because there is a pending first-degree amendment and a pending second-degree amendment. So the second-degree amendment would have to be laid aside in order to allow a vote. As long as there is the opportunity for a second-degree amendment don’t allow the first- and second-degree amendments that are pending to come to a vote, we are foreclosed from offering germane amendments.

That is not the intent of our postcloture rule. I believe it is an abuse of the intent of our postcloture rule. I hope it will not happen here. I am hoping against hope that there will not be an objection to my unanimous consent request so that I can pursue a critical issue can be addressed by the Senate.

If we don’t address this issue, it seems to me we are leaving a significant gap in the reforms we are struggling so hard to restore honesty to accounting rules.

In 1994, the Financial Accounting Standards Board issued a tentative rule which said that stock options should be expensed like all other forms of compensation. That is what they decided was the right thing to do.

Well, Congress intervened. The executives intervened strongly, beat back FASB with huge pressure, all set out in the FASB history of its effort to bring about that decision.

If we don’t address this issue, it seems to me we are leaving a significant gap in the reforms we are struggling so hard to restore honesty to accounting rules.

The amendment on which I would like to have a vote cannot be voted on because there is a pending first-degree amendment and a pending second-degree amendment. So the second-degree amendment would have to be laid aside in order to allow a vote. As long as there is the opportunity for a second-degree amendment don’t allow the first- and second-degree amendments that are pending to come to a vote, we are foreclosed from offering germane amendments.

What my amendment would do is take what is the most significant post-Enron issue that is left open, which is accounting for these huge amounts of stock options that go mainly to executives, and direct this board that now has an independent source of funding to review—‘review’ is the key word—this matter and make an appropriate decision within 1 year.

Mr. MCCAIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I wonder if I can yield on the time of the Senator from Arizona, because the time is so limited here that I am going to have very little. I think the Senator has a half hour and, assuming that the Senator can be recognized, I believe that I have about 10 or 15 minutes of time remaining. I would like to ask if the Senator from Texas would permit that I be allowed to yield to the Senator from Arizona, if the Senator from Arizona is asking to make a question to be taken out of his own time.

Mr. GRAMM. Reserving the right to object, the Senator started out with a unanimous consent request and then launched into a speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no request pending.

Mr. GRAMM. Maybe if the Senator would do his unanimous consent request and then yield, that would be fine.

Mr. LEVIN. I would rather do my unanimous consent request at the end of the time, rather than at the beginning of the time. I make a parliamentary inquiry. If I make a unanimous consent—

Mr. GRAMM. I don’t object to the Senator yielding. I wanted to be sure we had the time we were supposed to have.

Mr. LEVIN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Arizona, if he is willing, be able to ask a question on his time. I yield to the Senator from Arizona for that question and then I retain the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I will be very brief, due to the shortness of time. I wonder if the Senator from Michigan remembers my comments last Thursday when I referred to an old boxing term, ‘the fix is in.’ There was no vote allowed on my amendment, which is a clearcut, absolutely unequivocal statement about the use of stock options for executive compensation. Does the Senator really believe that, since my amendment was blocked by that side, his amendment is not going to be blocked by this side?
The fix is in, I say to the Senator from Michigan. I hope he knows that. This is a terrible mistake, a terrible mistake, because we are not addressing what every observer knows is a vital and critical aspect of reforming this system. The fact is the fix is in. I didn't get a vote on my amendment and the Senator from Michigan won't get one on his. Very frankly, since that side blocked my vote, I can understand them blocking this vote. I think it is wrong on both sides.

The American people deserve to know how we stand on the issue of stock options. Does the Senator understand that?

Mr. REID. Will my friend yield for a question on my time?

Mr. LEVIN. I am happy to.

Mr. REID. The Senator will recall the Senate from Arizona talking about the fix being in, and the RECORD will show that the Senator from Arizona asked that his amendment be in order postcloture, and, as the Senator from Michigan will recall, I objected to that because at that time we had 56 other amendments that were pending. They also wanted them to be in order.

Mr. MCCAIN. If the Senator will yield, that is not correct. Mine was a motion to recommit.

Mr. REID. I am talking about the objection, which I was involved, and does the Senator from Michigan recall that objection to the unanimous consent request by the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. LEVIN. I believe I do recall the objection to the request, and I would rather let the RECORD speak for itself as to the other matters because I think the issue before us is a somewhat different issue than we faced on the McCain-Levin amendment last week. Now we have a Levin-McCain-Levin amendment, which is somewhat different. I supported Senator McCain's amendment, and, indeed, I have been very active in trying to get this accounting rule adopted in the way the independent accounting board wants to have it adopted. That is the key emphasis.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield on my time for a question?

Mr. LEVIN. I am happy to yield.

Mr. SARBANES. As I understand the Senator's amendment—the one he will be seeking to offer,

Mr. LEVIN. I will be seeking unanimous consent to have the second-degree amendment laid aside so that I can do so.

Mr. SARBANES. As I understand it, this amendment is not the Congress trying to legislate what the accounting standards board should be; it is that condition.

Mr. LEVIN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. I think that is important because I, frankly, do not think that the Congress should get into the business of trying to legislate accounting standards. I don't think we have the expertise or the competence to do it. And it turns established accounting standards into a straight-out political exercise, and I don't think that is wise.

As I understand the Senator's amendment, it would simply reference the issue of the treatment of stock options to the financial accounting standards board, for them to make their own independent judgment as to how this matter should be treated, is that correct?

Mr. LEVIN. The Senator is correct. Mr. SARBANES. And I understand that the terms of reference are such that it does not presuppose a particular substantive conclusion; it is, in effect, left open, or even level, however you want to describe it—a level playing field for FASB, the expert body that has been established to make judgements over independent judgment as to how these matters should be addressed, is that correct?

Mr. LEVIN. The amendment directs FASB to review the issue and adopt an appropriate standard. Those are the words in the amendment. I must tell my good friend from Maryland, however, that there is a history here that cannot be ignored.

The history is that FASB tried to adopt a standard in 1994. They said what the right standard was. They were beaten back and brow-beaten and pressured, so they had to give up what they believed is right. That is in their own history. Then they recommended to corporations to expense options, because that is the right thing to do. But they offered an option to corporations to simply disclose the value of options in their financial statement in a footnote. They left that option open.

So I have come to the conclusion that there will not be an objection to a vote on this amendment. For the life of me, I cannot see how anybody can object to a vote on an amendment, which simply tells the independent accounting standards board to reach an appropriate decision.

Now, we did intervene 8 years ago, and I believed it was wrong for us to intervene. Nine of us voted no; 90 voted yes. We told them: Do not change the rule; do not expense options.

In my judgment, it was wrong procedurally and it was wrong in terms of the substance. But it is my hope that, No. 1, we will be allowed to have a vote, and, No. 2, it would be my expectation, however, if it is left to the independence of FASB, that FASB would continue to do what they said was the right thing, which is to expense options.

It is left to their independent judgment to reach an appropriate conclusion under the language of my amendment.

Mr. SARBANES. So it would be FASB's call?

Mr. LEVIN. It would be FASB's call. Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I simply want to say I am supportive of this amendment. I think this is the right way to go about it.

Let me repeat, I do not think the Congress itself should be in the business of legislating accounting standards, but this amendment does not do that. It references the issue to the very body that has been established to accomplish that, which has the expertise and the competence. The amendment also helps to underscore the independence of FASB and a congressional perception that they should call it as they see it. I hope at the appropriate time the Senator will be able to obtain permission to bring his amendment before the body.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. DASCHLE. I am sorry. I think the Senator from Michigan has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. LEVIN. I ask unanimous consent that I yield to the majority leader for whatever time he wishes to take and that this time not be from that few minutes I have remaining, and that the floor be returned to me at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I will use my leader time, as not to take any time still allotted to the Senator from Michigan.

I hope we can get the unanimous consent request that the Senator from Michigan is propounding. I will also say that this is not a question of if he can get consent and ultimately bring the amendment to the floor. One way or the other we will have a vote on the Levin amendment. It may not be on this bill this afternoon if we fail, but our colleagues need to know we will have a vote on this amendment. This will occur. If I have to offer it myself, we will have a vote on this amendment. So we can do it this afternoon, we can do it tomorrow, or we can do it next week. We are going to have a vote on this amendment. Senators need to take that into account before they object.

Let me say as strongly as I can, this amendment belongs on this bill. This is exactly what I think we ought to be doing, and I think on a bipartisan basis there is strong support for what Senator Levin is proposing.

I want to speak briefly this afternoon, in my leader time, on the amendment itself. I think it is important, as my colleagues have been noting, that the Levin amendment contains precisely the right solution to the difficult problems of determining the proper accounting treatment for stock options. It reserves that judgment for the appropriate body, the Financial Accounting Standards Board. The ones given the authority, they are the ones with the credibility, they are the ones with the standing to make the right decisions about this very important and complex matter. I argue this is the heart of our ability to deal with the accounting reforms that are in the Sarbanes and Leahy bills. It has become all too clear that accounting standards are complex and can be easily manipulated by aggressive and sometimes unscrupulous corporate executives. Unfortunately, FASB was the institution that has contributed to those manipulations. In fact, it is arguable that the undermining of FASB’s independence was the necessary precondition to the crisis in confidence afflicting our capital markets today.

One of the many virtues of the Sarbanes bill is that it corrects that situation. It provides for a new, improved FASB, giving it for the first time full financial independence from the accounting profession and the Securities and Exchange Commission. In effect, the first and most vital improvement we need with respect to establishing clarity and regularity of accounting standards.

Another needed improvement is for those of us in Congress to allow FASB to do its job. In 1994—and my colleagues and I have referenced this—when this issue was last taken up by the Senate, I am proud to say I was one of nine Senators who voted against the Senate intruding itself on FASB’s decision-making process. That is the only reason I opposed my colleague’s amendment last week. As well intended as it is, in my view it did the same thing as FASB in the Wall Street Journal that morning trying to do it 9 years ago. It asserts Congress’s authority to undermine the independence of that board. I opposed it 9 years ago, and I oppose it today, but for obviously different results.

At the same time, the Senate was coming at the options issue from the direction of prohibiting expenses back in 1994, and as I said today the momentum is the opposite, but the right course is the same. Let the experts on the standards boards do their job and make the appropriate decision. Eight years ago, the technical accounting questions were essentially the same as they are today, although obviously 8 years have given us an entirely different perspective than the one we had back then. Nonetheless, the questions are still real. Accountants still debate the relative merits of the opposing sides. We still have expert opinion going both ways. On the one hand, the argument is made that if options are not expensed, bottom lines look far more attractive than they actually should be, and the investors can be deceived by the distorted financial pictures that result.

On the other hand, we hear that it is inherently impossible to value options with no concrete reality behind what the options will actually be worth when they are exercised. There is also a real debate about the incentive effects of options.

Supporters argue that they better align an employee’s interests with the company’s. Opponents contend they result in a “pump and dump” mentality, with senior executives seeking to inflate their stock prices at any cost so they can quickly and cynically enrich themselves.

In contrast to those complex questions, the Levin amendment is simplicity itself. It is one sentence. It says that FASB shall:

"Review the accounting treatment of employee stock options and shall, within one year of enactment, adopt an appropriate generally-accepted accounting principle for the treatment of employee stock options—"

End of issue.

The business of setting accounting standards is lodged, by the Levin amendment, in the board that the Sarbanes bill expressly seeks to strengthen and improve. I fully support the Levin amendment and the philosophy behind it. But for obviously different results.

Restoring independence to the accounting standards is one of the overriding objectives of the Sarbanes bill, and that is one of my main reasons for supporting it as strongly as I do. That was my primary reason for voting in 1994 against a previous attempt to direct FASB in its decision about expensing, and it is the primary reason for supporting the Levin amendment today.

So I will end on this particular issue where I began. There will be a vote on the Levin amendment. It will be today, tomorrow, next week, or at some point in the future, but Senators should not be misled. If there is an objection today, by all means let us debate. We might as well have it. We might as well get it. We might as well include it in the Sarbanes bill because it will be included in one fashion or another, ultimately, before the work has been done in the Senate on this very important, complex, and comprehensive challenge we face.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. LEVIN. How much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 25 minutes remaining.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I quote from a few observers what the stakes are in this vote, and what the stakes have been in terms of the way in which stock options have not been expensed, have been stealth compensation, have fueled the incredible increase in terms of executive pay, and have been a driving force behind the deceptive accounting. Corporate executives have convincing this Nation and undermined public confidence in the credibility of our financial statements.

Robert Samuelson, an economist, said the following:

The point is that the growth of stock options has created huge conflicts of interest that executives will be hard-pressed to avoid. In some companies executives will taint many options as possible from their compensation committees, typically composed of “outside” directors. But because “directors are [manipulated] by management, sympathetic to them, or simply ineffective,” the amounts may well be excessive.

Stock options are not evil, but unless we curb the present madness, we are courting continual trouble.

This is what a retired vice president at J.P. Morgan and Company said: There can be no real reform without honest accounting for stock options. A decade ago, the Financial Accounting Standards Board recommended options be counted as a cost against earnings like all other forms of compensation, but corporate lobbyists resisted and Congress did their bidding. Alan Greenspan and Warren Buffett, among others, are calling for the same change now. Whether or not they are right, the accounting profession can act without congressional interference. Treating options like other forms of pay would make executive compensation transparent, diminish the temptation to cook the books, and get managers less inclined towards excessive risk taking.

Warren Buffett, who was quoted by Senator MCCAIN last week, said the following: If options aren’t a form of compensation, what are they? If compensation isn’t an expense, what is it? If expenses shouldn’t go into the calculation of earnings, where in the world should they go?

A New York Times editorial of March 31 of this year stated:

We have no quarrel with the business lobby’s claim that stock options have helped fuel America’s entrepreneurship, particularly in Silicon Valley. But in the interest of transparent accounting and financial integrity, options should be treated as what they are, a worthy form of compensation that companies must report as an expense.

Robert Felton, director of McKinsey & Company’s Seattle office, said:

Because they have so much at stake with these huge grants, options are likely to have encouraged some managers to cheat and cook the books.

Allan Sloan of Newsweek:

... options are a free lunch for companies.

I’m all in favor of employees becoming millionaires via options—I’m an employee, after all—but I’m also in favor of companies paying profit-sharing, if that is what workers want and that shows the real profit and loss. Ignoring options’ costs and low-balling CEO packages are simply outrageous. When campaigns start charging options and disclosing true CEO and director compensation numbers, I’ll believe that they’ve seen the light.

According to the Economist, last year, stock options accounted for 38 percent of the pay of chief executives of large American companies. So over half the compensation of our CEOs of major companies now comes from stock options. For those of us who think of the financial statements’ bottom line is to distort what is going on at companies. It is part of the reason we have not had accurately reflective financial statements at our corporations. It is part of the reason for the soup we are in right now.

Where financial statements have been accurate, the picture of what a company’s financial situation is, it has provided steadied compensation in huge amounts to executives, it has watered down the value of stock to the owners of a corporation. That is why now we have far-truncated support from the organizations which represent stockholders.

That is why, for instance, TIAA-CREF, the largest pension fund in the United States for teachers is supportive of changing the accounting for stock options. It is why the Council for Institutional Investors, which is the leading shareholders organization for pension funds, now favors expensing stock options in order to give an accurate reflection of what a company’s financial condition is. It is why the AFL-CIO supports the amendments offered last week and the amendment which hopefully will be offered today if we are allowed to have a vote on this.

Alan Greenspan says this is the top post-Enron reform. Expensing stock options is the top post-Enron reform. That is the Chairman of the Federal Reserve, Paul Volcker, former Federal Reserve Chairman, supports a change in stock option accounting. Arthur Levitt, former SEC Chairman, supports the change; Warren Buffett, as we mentioned; and a host of economists.

Standard & Poor’s believes you have to expense stock options if you are going to show an accurate earnings calculation; Citizens for Tax Justice; Consumer Federation of America; Consumers Union, and on and on.

The Washington Post of April 18 says the following:

... expert consensus favors treating options as a compensation item which would mean that reported earnings might actually reflect reality. ... But nobody wants to ban this form of compensation; the goal is merely to have the expense shown.

That is the end of that particular quote. I would like the entire quote printed in the RECORD, and I ask unanimous consent that all the editorials and comments that I referred to be printed in the RECORD in full.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Jan. 30, 2002] STOCK OPTION MADNESS (By Robert J. Samuelson) As the stock options exploded in the late 1980s and the ’90s, the theory was simple. If you made top executives and managers into owners, they would act in shareholders’ interests. Executives’ pay packages became increasingly skewed toward options.

By 2000, the typical executive office of one of the country’s 350 major companies earned about $5.2 million, with almost half of that return, according to William M. Mercer Inc., a consulting firm. About half of those companies also had stock-option programs for at least half their employees.

Up to a point, the theory worked. Twenty years ago, America’s corporate managers were widely criticized. Japanese and German managers seemed infrared. By companies’ standards, their American rivals seemed stodgy, complacent and bureaucratic. Stock options were one tool in a managerial upheaval that re-focused attention away from corporate empire-building and toward improved profitability and efficiency.

All this contributed to the 1990’s economic revival. By holding down costs, companies restrained inflation. By aggressively promoting new products and technologies, companies boosted production and employment. But slowly stock options became corrupted by carelessness, overuse and greed. As more executives developed big personal stakes in stock options, price—rising became separate from improving the business and its profitability. This is what seems to have happened.

The company adored stock options. About 60 percent of employees received an annual award of options, equal to 5 percent of their base salary. Executives and top managers got more. At year-end 2000, all Enron managers and workers had options that could be exercised for nearly 47 million shares. Under the typical plan, each option holder can buy a given number of shares at the market price on the day the option is issued. This is called the ‘strike price.’ But the option usually can’t be exercised for 6-10 years. If the stock’s price rises in that time, the option can yield a tidy profit. The lucky recipient buys at the strike price and sells at the market price. On the 47 million Enron options, the average “strike price” was about $30, and at the end of 2000, the market price was $83. The potential profit was nearly $2.5 billion.

Given the huge rewards, it would have been astonishing if Enron’s managers had not become obsessed with raising the company’s stock price and—to the extent possible—tried to influence it. And while Enron’s stock soared, why would anyone complain about accounting abuses, themselves resulting in the resulting abuses, the pressures are not unique to Enron. It takes a naïve view of human nature to think that many executives won’t strive to maximize their personal wealth.

This is an invitation to abuse. To influence stock prices, executives can issue optimistic profit projections. They can delay some spending, such as research and development (this temporarily helps profits). They can engage in stock buybacks (these raise per-share earnings, because shares are outstanding). And, of course, they can exploit accounting rules. Even temporary blips in stock prices can create opportunities to unfold profitable deals.

The point is that the growth of stock options has created huge conflicts of interest that are not readily avoidable. Indeed, many executives will coax as many options as possible from their compensation committees, typically composed of “outside” directors. But “directors are [manipulated] by management, sympathetic to them, or simply ineffectual.” The amounts may well be excessive, argue Harvard law and accounting professor Jesse Fried and attorney David Walker in a recent study.

Stock options are not evil, but unless we curb the present madness, we are courting continual trouble. Here are three ways to check the overuse of options.

(1) Change the accounting of options as a cost. Amazingly, when companies issue stock options, they do not have to make a deduction to profits. This encourages companies to create new stock options—let’s say a host of them that don’t exercise.

(2) Index stock options to the market. If a company’s stock rises in tandem with the overall stock market, the gains don’t reflect any management ability or growth yet. But if the most options still increase in value, executives get a windfall. Options should reward only for gains above the market.

(3) Don’t reprice options if the stock falls. Some corporate boards of directors issue new options at lower prices if the company’s stock falls. What’s the point? Options are supposed to prod executive to improve the company’s profits and stock price. Why protect them if they fail?

Within limits, stock options represent a useful reward for management. But we lost sight of that logic. In the end, the free money sprinkled about by uncritical corporate directors. The unintended result was a morally lax, get-rich-quick mentality. Corporate managers, if need be, by new government regulations— one large lesson of the Enron scandal will have been lost.

[From the Washington Post, April 18, 2002] MONEY TALKS Alan Greenspan, perhaps the nation’s most revered economist, thinks employee stock options should be counted, like salaries, as a company’s operating expenses. About half of those companies also had stock-option programs for at least half their executives and other employees millions of dollars in stock options without recording a penny of expense. Amazingly, when companies issued stock options, they did not have to make a deduction to profits. This encourages companies to create new options. By one company, the nation’s foremost investor, has long argued the same line. The Financial Accounting Standards Board, the expert group that writes accounting rules, reached the same conclusion eight years ago. The London-based International Accounting Standards Board recently recommended the same approach.

In short, a recent report of experts endorses the common-sense idea that, whether you get paid in cash or company cars or options, the expense should be recorded today. The Senate Committee hearing on the issue is likely to be check the overuse of options.

Why does this matter? Because the current rules—which allow companies to grant executives and other employees millions of dollars in stock options without recording a dime of expenses—make a mockery of corporate accounts. Companies that grant stock options lavishly can be reporting large profits when the truth is they are losing a large loss. In 2000, for example, Yahoo reported a profit of $7.1 million, but the real number after adjusting for the cost of employee stock options was $1.3 billion. Cisco reported $4.6 billion in profits; the real number was $2.7 billion loss. By reporting—make-believe profits, companies may have inflated investors into bidding up their stock prices. This is one cause of the Internet bubble, whose bursting helped precipitate last year’s economic slowdown.

In short, the expert consensus favors treating options as a corporate expense, which would mean that reported earnings might actually reflect real company performance. It is not enough for neither experts nor logic. They claim that the value of options is uncertain, so they... have no idea what number to put into the accounts. But the price of an option can actually be calculated quite precisely, and managers have no difficulty doing the math for the purposes of their accounting. The directors also claim that options are crucial to the health of young companies. But nobody wants to ban this form of compensation; the goal is merely to make it count as an expense. Finally, dissenters say that options need not be so counted because granting them involves no cash outlay. But giving employees options that have cash value amounts to giving them cash.

The dissenters include weighty figures in both parties. Sen. Joe Lieberman (D-Conn.) is the author of a bill that’s pending in the Senate, and last week President Bush himself declared that Mr. Greenspan is wrong on this issue. What might be behind this? Many of the corporate executives who give generously to politicians are themselves the beneficiaries of options—often to the tune of millions of dollars. High-tech companies, an import of corporations, can provide an extra incentive to keep employees. As options reform with all they important source of campaign cash, are fighting this issue. What might be behind this? Many of the corporate executives who give generously to politicians are themselves the beneficiaries of options—often to the tune of millions of dollars. High-tech companies, an import of corporations, can provide an extra incentive to keep employees.

Options, he said, are the most egregious, offered a primer on the misuses of stock options. Options have been abused by some companies and are in need of reform. Alan Greenspan, the Federal Reserve and the accounting rules treat employees options as a free lunch for companies — essentially free money during the recent dot-com boom. They are tired of uneasiness practices like the repricing of options to ensure that executives still get windfalls if the stock price falls. Making executives to acquire stock (often if the bet does not pay off) is another dubious compensation practice.

We have no quarrel with the business lobby’s claim that stock options have helped fuel America’s entrepreneurship, particularly in Silicon Valley. But in the interest of truthful accounting and greater financial integrity options should be treated as what they are: a worthy form of compensation that companies can provide as an expense. Congress must end the dot-com-era notion that options equal free money. That would be a form of compensation that top executives cannot treat publicly traded companies as Ponzi schemes created for their own enrichment.

From the New York Times, March 31, 2002

STOCK OPTION EXCUSES

In his Congressional testimony last month, Jeffrey Skilling, Enron’s former chief executive, offered a primer on the misuses of stock options. Options, he said, are the most egregious of accounting rules, a way for corporations to pump up profits artificially. They also netted him a tidy $62.5 million in 2000 and helped Enron pay no income taxes in four of the last five years.

Stock options, in theory, aren’t a bad idea. By giving employees the chance to buy a company’s stock in the future at today’s price, corporations create an extra incentive for hard work and can augment compensation. The New York Times Company awards option to its top executives. But like other incentives, the practice has been abused by some companies. An accounting reforms that have been out of hand during the boom years of the late 1990’s, options have been abused by some companies and are in need of reform. A good place to start would be for Congress to end the conflict between how the tax laws and the accounting rules treat employees options. The Financial Accounting Standards Board, the nation’s chief accounting standards setting body, has identified that as one of the most pressing post-Enron reforms affecting corporate governance.

That conflict creates a loophole that has allowed companies to treat stock options as essentially free money during the recent dot-com bubble. A company does not have to report options on its financial statements. An economist who has been arguing that incentives have been out of hand during the boom years of the late 1990’s, options have been abused by some companies and are in need of reform.

As a result, corporate executives can build themselves oodles of stock options without fear of denting their profit reports. Once the options are exercised, the company can treat the appreciation in the shares’ value—the employees’ profit—as an expense for tax purposes. At Enron, stock option deduction was worth 162.9 billion to the company. The directors got their options when Dell stock was about $52, double today’s price. By getting options on $850,000 worth of stock, the company avoided paying $15,286 in annual fees, directors avoided losing money—and didn’t have to tie up $350,000. Meanwhile, they had the same upside as regular investors, risking $850,000. The company says its compensation packages are skewed toward options, so that employees and directors don’t make out unless regular stockholders do.

Now to Knight Ridder, which has been on a cost-cutting kick for years. Last year chairman Tony Ridder got $955,720 in salary and no bonus. He also got options on 150,000 shares. Knight Ridder values the options at about $1.6 million, but by most rules of thumb, they were worth twice that much. Knight Ridder directors bought 16,298 shares, directors avoided losing money—and didn’t have to tie up $350,000. Meanwhile, they had the same upside as regular investors, risking $850,000. The company says its compensation packages are skewed toward options, so that employees and directors don’t make out unless regular stockholders do.

ACCOUNTING FOR OPTIONS

(By Joseph E. Stiglitz)

Deja vu. The post-Enron imbroglio over stock options is a reminder that history—if forgotten—does indeed repeat itself. Eight years ago, while serving on Clinton’s Council of Economic Advisers, I was involved in a heated debate over information disclosure. The Financial Accounting Standards Board had proposed a new standard that would require firms to account for the value of executive options in their balance sheets and income statements.

When FASB made its proposal for what would have clearly been an improvement in accounting practices, Silicon Valley and Wall Street were united in opposition. The arguments put forward then are the same as those put forward today, and they are as specious and self-serving now as they were eight years ago.

OUTRAGEOUS

disclosing the information would adversely affect share prices. That is, if people only knew how much their equity claims on the firm could be diluted by options, they would pay less for shares. And that is precisely why the disclosure is so important. Markets can only allocate resources efficiently when prices accurately reflect underlying economic and financial information as well as market information. If markets overestimate the value of a particular set of ventures, resources will mistakenly flow in that direction. In part, that is what happened in the dot-com and telecom bubbles. Irrational exuberance played its part, but so too did bad accounting practices, i.e., distorted information.

To support this argument, I offer an analogy that I think will never be perfect and asymmetries of information are pervasive. But one of the key insights of the modern theory of information is that participants do not always have an incentive to disclose fully and accurately all the relevant information, and so it is important to have standards.

This is where the second specious argument enters: Critics of FASB’s proposal claimed that it is impossible to value options and so it was absurd to require companies to disclose estimates. The point is that market participants are smart enough to read through dozens of footnotes to figure out the implications of options for the value of the company. And they care about the truth and that the world would be misled by the more accurate numbers that would be provided under the reform proposals, and unable to redo the calculations themselves.

TRANSPARENCY

There is one more reason for the U.S. to be resolute in improving our accounting standards by including better accounting for options. During the East Asia crisis the U.S. preached the virtues of transparency but then refused to do anything about regulating the money market banks. America also preached the virtues of our accounting standards only to find that the world was laughing at Enron and Arthur Andersen. Tightening our rules on accounting of options would signal that the U.S. is serious about openness, serious about improving its accounting standards—despite the special interests opposed to changes—and willing to learn from its mistakes.

Many of the same forces that allied themselves in the 1990s against changes in accounting for options are now trying to suppress this attempt to make our market economy work better. In the earlier episode, the National Economic Council, the U.S. Treasury, and the Department of Commerce intervenes in what was supposed to be an independent accounting board, and put pressure on FASB to rescind its proposed regulations. They won, and the country lost. Today, there is a risk once again of political intervention. At least this time, the voices of responsible economic leadership, such as Alan Greenspan, are heard. I only hope that this time they will succeed.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the Republican staff of the Joint Economic Committee put out a report called, “Understanding the Stock Option Debate.” They have gone through a lengthy analysis dated July 9, 2002, in which they conclude the following:

Existing accounting principles provide an unambiguous answer. Stock option awards should indeed be treated as a cost in financial statements.

It is quite clear to me that two things are true. No. 1, that how we treat stock options is an essential part of the post-Enron reform effort. That is No. 1. No. 2, it seems clear to me that there is at least a likelihood that a majority of this body, if allowed to vote on this issue, would refer this matter to an independent accounting standards board which has its own source of revenue, free from the kind of pressure which it was under in 1994 and 1995, to reach an appropriate conclusion.

Do I believe that conclusion will be the same as they reached in 1994? I do. It is very clear to me they would reach such a conclusion and should reach such a conclusion. But as our colleagues have pointed out, that is up to the board under this amendment. We would not be adopting a standard.

In all honesty, I expect they would continue on the same course they were on 8 years ago when they were violently thrown off course by people who had control over the purse strings of the organization. I would expect that would happen. But under this amendment, it is their call, not ours.

I support the McCain amendment because I believe, as I believed then, that the accounting standards board wanted to expense options and that we, in executive pressure, interfered with that decision on their part. That is why I believe Senator MCCAIN’s amendment is also appropriate. But we cannot even get a vote on that amendment. Last week, we were not able to bring that amendment to a vote.

But this amendment is different. This amendment says to the independent board: review this issue. Make an appropriate decision within a year.

For the life of me I not only do not see how folks—regardless of the side of this particular issue that they are on—will want to vote against this amendment when it does not tell them what to do but just asks them to review it and decide within a year as to what the appropriate accounting method is. I do not understand why, in the middle of a debate on the reforms which are essential to restore public confidence after the Enron fiasco, this Senate should not be allowed to vote on this issue on this bill.

When the majority leader announced that one way or another we will get to a vote on this amendment, I was glad to hear that. I didn’t know he was going to say that, but I certainly was glad he said that. But it seems to me that adds a reason we ought to vote for the amendment on this bill.

This is the right place. Surely it is the right time. There has perhaps never been a more critical moment in our economic history in the last few decades than we are facing right now, to help us restore public confidence. It will be an additional contribution to that restoration of public confidence if we take this action. If we say yes, 8 years ago we did intervene, but now we don’t want to tell the accounting standards board that they should not do exactly what they did 8 years ago. What we are telling them now is: Do the right thing.

We know what they tried to do 8 years ago. It is laid out in the record by them. They wanted to do what they believed was the right thing. If they had done so, they would have been put out of business.

Now we have an opportunity, it seems to me, to do the right thing ourselves, which is to tell the board that has the responsibility to make the accounting standards, to adopt what they believe is the appropriate standard. That is the right thing to do.
Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a question on my time?
Mr. LEVIN. I will be happy to.
Mr. REID. Is the Senator aware that the stock market, the Dow as of now is down 336 points as of today?
Mr. LEVIN. I am not aware of that. But it surely adds an additional urgency, if we need additional urgency, for why we should do everything in our power to restore public confidence in the financial systems in this country.
I learned when my cosponsors before Senator BIDEN is a cosponsor of the amendment, which is at the desk.
I will ask unanimous consent we be able to vote on that at a later moment. I would if I could ask the Chair how much time I have remaining.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 12 minutes remaining.
Mr. LEVIN. I understand Senator MCCAIN would like to speak at this time, I see the Reisable. But we are on the floor, so I do not know if this fits his particular timetable or not.
I ask unanimous consent I be allowed to yield to Senator MCCAIN on this.
Mr. REID. I object.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.
Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, at this time I ask unanimous consent to lay aside the pending second-degree amendment, No. 4286, and call for consideration my amendment 4283, on stock options, which is a second-degree amendment to the Edwards amendment No. 4187.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?
Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, let me say there is something on which I agree with the majority leader. That is, at some point we are going to make a judgment on this issue. But we are currently in a situation where we have 97 first-degree amendments that have been filed. We have 24 second-degree amendments. We have 3 different approaches to this issue.
Senator MCCAIN wants to make a decision and set a policy.
Senator LEVIN, as I read it, wants a fair trial and then a hanging.
And Senator ENZI and others would simply like to have a fair trial.
What is the right outcome? I think that is subject to debate. That is why I think we ought to have the debate. The idea that when we have three different approaches, we are going to decide that one of them is going to be debated on, voted on, but not all of them is something we should not expect to happen.
I do not support Senator MCCAIN’s amendment, but he has every right, it seems to me, to consider it. I certainly considered it. I am certainly willing to vote on it. There may be people who do not want to vote on this issue, but I am not one of them. So I certainly do object. I object.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.
Several Senators addressed the Chair.
Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a question on my time?
Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the only way we are going to get to debate and votes is if we allow the pending amendments which are the first-and second-degree amendments to be voted on so we can vote on other amendments without having one gatekeeper denying opportunity for all the others on this floor to offer amendments and have them voted on. That is not the intention of cloture and postcloture.
I do not think we have been used in this way before where, postcloture, germaine amendments are supposed to be taken up and voted on, where first-and second-degree amendments have not been disposed of so they can be used, not with the consent of their sponsors, but they are used by others to block consideration of the amendments.
The Senator from Texas says he would like to have a debate and vote. I am not disposed of the second-degree amendment, take up the Carnahan amendment and vote on it, take up the Edwards amendment and vote on it.
Mr. GRAMM. Will the Senator yield?
Mr. LEVIN. I will be happy to yield on the Senator’s time.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?
Mr. DORGAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan is here. I understand he has been yielding back and forth. I assume we could, under these circumstances, have one Senator run the entire 30 hours, as long as they keep yielding to other Senators.
There are others of us, of course, who want to be heard and who want to offer amendments.
Mr. GRAMM. I think that is fair. I withdraw my request.
Mr. LEVIN. Yes, I yield the floor.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.
Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I think if we want to deal with this issue today, probably the way to do it is to have a unanimous consent agreement and have a vote on all three amendments—have a vote on Senator MCCAIN’s amendment, have a vote on the Levin amendment, have a vote on Senator ENZI’s amendment so that we would have the full range of choices.
But so there is no question that we ought to be able to do that. It might very well be that we need a separate bill to deal with this issue. If a Senator were to offer this amendment in earnest, I would want an opportunity to amend it. I think having FASB look at this issue—which they are certainly going to do after this bill is agreed to because this is going to be a self-funded agency, and they are going to have greater independence—I think having them look at it is something that we ought to do.
But I think we shouldn’t pretend to ourselves that the Levin amendment is a neutral amendment.
Asking them to look at it when it mandates by law after having looked at it that within 12 months they adopt in appropriate generally accepted accounting principles for the treatment of employee stock options—there is nothing neutral about that; in other words, study it and within a year adopt a recommendation.
As I understand it, Senator ENZI and others would have the SEC do a study and make a recommendation based on their study.
If this amendment were going to be dealt with in isolation, I would want an opportunity to at least leave it to FASB as to what they determine rather than mandating that they ought to issue a new accounting principle. It may be that they would determine not to do that.
Let me reiterate that I don’t have any concern about voting on this issue. Maybe I should reserve my time. I want to speak on this at some point. We have several Members here who are going to speak. I have to be here for the whole time.
I reserve the remainder of my time.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.
Mr. REID. I don’t think this is necessary. But so there is no question that the time Senator DASCHLE used be counted against the 30 hours.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?
Mr. GRAMM. Reserving the right to object, I did not hear.
Mr. REID. I wanted Senator DASCHLE’s time to be counted against the 30 hours.
Mr. GRAMM. Yes.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.
The Senator from North Dakota.
Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, we are in a postcloture period of some 30

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE S6741
hours. I understand we will complete that at 6 o’clock or so this afternoon.

What is happening here is really an outrage, from my standpoint. We are in postcloture. I have a germane amendment. I have been here every single day since this bill came to the floor of the Senate prepared and ready to offer my amendment. Now, postcloture, I have a germane amendment. And the only way, apparently, that I can offer my amendment is if the Senator from Texas is willing to allow me to offer it. That is not the way the Senate should work.

I want to briefly describe my amendment.

My amendment requires the disgorgement of profits, bonuses, incentives, and so on that the CEOs of corporations receive 12 months prior to bankruptcy.

That is not in the bill at the present time. It ought to be in the bill.

The bill contains a disgorgement provision that requires the return of incentive and bonus payments received prior to a restatement of earnings. I support that being in the bill, but there is nothing about the requirement to divest all those bonuses and incentive payments received prior to bankruptcy. That ought to be in this bill.

Let me describe some of the problems that we are dealing with. We have been holding some hearings over in the Commerce Committee on the subject of Enron. Here is what some Enron officers reported before “enron went bankrupt.”

Kenneth Lay, $101 million; Ken Rice, $72.7 million; Jeffrey Skilling, $66.9 million; Stan Horton, $45 million; Andy Fastow, $30.4 million.

They did pretty well at the top. Of course, they already filed bankruptcy with their corporation.

Should some of this be given back?

I have a constituent in North Dakota who wrote to me and said: I worked for Enron for a good many years. I built up a retirement fund of $330,000. It is now worth $1,700. That was my family’s retirement fund. What am I to do? I have lost it all.

But not everybody lost it all with respect to Enron. Those close to the top made a fortune, and the folks at the bottom lost it all.

One of the 30 highest paid CEOs in New York, putting him ahead of IBM’s Louis Gerstner. That company had $14 billion in losses. And the CEO, Mr. Knapp, had a salary of $277,000, a bonus of $561,000, and stock options worth $18 million.

So does anybody here think he ought to keep all that money, just let the employees lose it? Do not anybody think that is unreasonable?

The Senator from Texas left the Chamber as I was beginning to speak. I was hoping I might get his attention. But as I understand where we are, we have a first- and a second-degree amendment.

The first-degree amendment is the Edwards amendment. It is followed by a second-degree amendment, which is the Carnahan amendment.

In order for anyone to offer an amendment postcloture today, we must ask consent to sit aside these amendments so we can offer our amendment. My understanding is, if someone here does not agree with that, then he can prevent that from happening. My understanding is that is precisely what would happen.

So the result is, for the next 5 hours, we will have gatekeepers who require us to say: Captain, may I? May I offer an amendment? And they will say: No, you may not. We will not allow the setting aside of the pending amendments.

So we will limp along to the end of the 50 hours not being able to offer germane amendments. It is outrageous, simply an outrageous process that puts us here. I think there will be a good number of Members of the Senate who, in the future, will consider this and find ways to avoid our being put in this position again.

But what I would like to do is have a debate about this amendment at some point. And perhaps there are people in this chamber who will stand up and say: Do you know what I think? I think if somebody takes home $50 or $80 million 6 months before bankruptcy, in the form of incentive payments and bonuses, they ought to be able to keep it, if they drove that company right straight into the ground.

Is there one person who will stand up in the Senate today to support that? Does one person want to support that position? Well, we will have a debate about this amendment at some point.

In the year before the Enron Corporation filed for bankruptcy, Kenneth Lay, the chairman of that company, and 140 other company officials received $310 million in salaries, bonuses, long-term incentives, loan advances, and other payments.

Does anybody here want to stand up and say: “That makes a lot of sense.” Anybody? Does anybody agree they should keep all that money? Do we hear nothing because they don’t have the floor, or is it that nobody here believes the top officials of Enron should keep $310 million prior to filing for bankruptcy, where their employees lost their jobs, lost their life savings in their 401(k)s, their investors lost their money?

How about NTL, Incorporated? It is a Manhattan TV cable operator that filed for bankruptcy in May, just several months after it gave its chief executive officer $18.9 million. It made him one of the 30 highest paid CEOs in New York, putting him ahead of IBM’s Louis Gerstner. That company had $14 billion in losses. And the CEO, Mr. Knapp, had a salary of $277,000, a bonus of $561,000, and stock options worth $18 million.

So does anybody here think he ought to keep all that money, just let the employees lose it? Does anybody think that is unreasonable?

The result is, for the next 5 hours, we will have gatekeepers who require us to say: Captain, may I? May I offer an amendment? And they will say: No, you may not. We will not allow the setting aside of the pending amendments.

My amendment is very simple. My amendment says that 1 year prior to bankruptcy, if you are getting the big bucks, big bonuses, big incentives, big stock options, and you want to take off with $50 or $100 million, and leave everybody else flat on their back, you cannot do it; you have to give it back. Very simple.
no one in the Senate has a right to offer an amendment because someone has set himself up as a gatekeeper saying: I will object to setting aside the Carnahan second-degree amendment. What kind of a way is that to legislate? Is someone afraid he will lose on this amendment? How will he lose the vote? Is that the purpose of the objection, that he is afraid we will have a vote, Senators will vote for my amendment, and therefore he will lose, so the words “I object” become a proxy for avoiding a loss on an important amendment? How many votes do you think would exist in the Senate for saying: We want to enable CEOs, who ran the corporation into the ground and took $20 million out and then filed bankruptcy, to keep the money; we want them to keep the bonus, to keep the stock option, to keep the commission payment, to keep the money? How many votes do you think exist for that? Ten, maybe 12? Probably not.

I think the Senator from Virginia is correct. Probably no one would stand up and support that proposition. So the question is why are we not allowing amendments to be voted on this afternoon? Why do we not yield to some one to answer that? Is there someone who can answer that? Perhaps we could find out on whose behalf the Senator from Wyoming objected.

How much time do I have remaining? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has 29 minutes remaining.

Mr. DORGAN. Parliamentary inquiry: Are we entitled, as a Senator, to 1 hour postcloture, those of us who are recognized?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is correct.

Mr. DORGAN. Several of my colleagues wish to speak. I want them to be able to speak. I hope they will offer amendments. I will guarantee them this: I will not be objecting to an amendment if they want to offer them. They have a right to offer an amendment today. They have a right to get a vote on the amendment. I will not object to that. The parliamentary inquiry is, I have just made a unanimous consent request that has been objected to. Am I prevented from making an identical request following the presentation by the two Senators on the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is not prevented from making unanimous consent requests.

Mr. DORGAN. That will give me some time then to snoop around the cloakrooms and the corridors and the nooks and crannies in the Capitol to find out who won and who lost. And what happens in this body.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I would like to use a portion of my 1 hour of time to say I agree with the purpose and the intent of the Dorgan amendment. I understand Senator Grassley of Iowa has a similar amendment that would disgorge or claw back into some ill-gotten gains of executives for the benefit of creditors and victims of their malfeasance or illegal acts.

I wish to speak not on process. Although, process seems to drive a lot of what happens in this body. I would like to talk to my colleagues and the American people about the merits of certain ideas or the demerits of certain ideas that have been raised.

There have been several measures dealing with the issue of stock options. Senator McCain’s measure was a direct hit. I don’t like it, but it was an accountable approach in getting rid of or killing stock options. We had Senator Enzi’s amendment, with Senator Enzi’s amendment, with Senator McCain, which was more of an indirect or ricochet killing of stock options by granting that study to FASB when everyone knows what FASB’s position is.

There is another option regarding stock options which I would like to discuss as the approach that ought to be taken. The majority leader, Senator Daschle, mentioned that we may have a vote on it today. We may have a vote on it tomorrow, but some day we will have a vote. There ought to be a full and fair discussion of this, which we ought to take as well as what the potential adverse impacts could be if either the study by FASB or the direct killing of stock options, as far as requiring the expensing of them, were to occur.

The more wise and prudent approach is one that was chiefly sponsored by my good friend Senator Enzi of Wyoming, along with Senators Lincoln Chafee, Boxer, and others who joined with us, Senators Murray, Cantwell, Bennett, Wyden, Lott, Burns, Frist, Craig and Ensign. Our amendment is a more comprehensive, reasonable alternative that has the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Treasury, and the IRS working together for a comprehensive, reasonable alternative.

Secondly, you need deterrence, stiff criminal and civil sanctions for illegal actions by corporate officers. There may be a few things added to make it better, but this bill essentially addresses that goal. Indeed, enhanced transparency and improved corporate governance will restore some investor confidence and foster proper disclosure for investment decisions. More stringent penalties will provide a deterrent and substantial disincentive for the corporate wrongdoing that has led to this understandable firestorm of skepticism as a fallout from the scandalous, fraudulent misrepresentations by executives in many companies.

In short, we must not enact measures that stifle innovation and endanger the American entrepreneurial spirit. Congress should not harm future opportunities for employees to own a part of their company for whom they work. Unfortunately, the Levin-McCain amendment does just that by unjustifiably upsetting the current tax treatment of stock options. It is unnecessary and unwise to change these particular accounting policies. It is virtually impossible to accurately determine the value of a stock option.

Now, how are you going to predict the future performance of a company? How are you going to predict the future share value of a company, especially in the vicissitudes of the stock market these days? For example, somebody is granted a stock option by a company—a new company—and the stock is trading, after an IPO, at $5 a share. The option to this employee is to purchase 100 shares of that company at $10 a share.

Now, nobody is going to exercise a stock option until the share value reaches the strike price, or $10, and it may never get to $10. It may take 5 years before that share value gets above $10 a share, where somebody would exercise the option. So it is very difficult to determine what is the actual value of that stock option when it is granted.

The amendment Mr. Levin has proposed will affect current law. Currently employers are not required to expense stock option grants on their financial statements. But they are permitted to deduct the stock option exercise—that is, down the road—as a compensation expense.

Now, this makes good sense. After all, a stock option grant does not require a cash outlay like other expenses such as wages.

Moreover, there is no transparency problem with failing to expense stock option grants because they are disclosed on the company’s financial statement. If somebody says there is a rough idea of its intrinsic value, it should be in boldprint, or it should be highlighted more and the disclosure needs to be more clear, that is fine. But I don’t think it is necessary, in the midst of better disclosure and transparency, to make this largely salutary and beneficial idea of stock options. Nonetheless, the amendments by Senators McCain and Levin mandate that any company taking a deduction must report the stock option as an expense on their income statement, their balance sheet, and the deduction may not exceed the reported expense.

Mr. Levin, Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. Allen. I yield.

Mr. Levin. Is the Senator aware that the Levin-McCain amendment he is referring to is not the amendment being offered at this time? There is another amendment, and they are totally different involving the taxation issue. This is not a taxation amendment at all. Hopefully, it will come before the Senate today.

Mr. Allen. Mr. President, I say to the Senator from Michigan, I understand his amendment offered today was one to have FASB study the issue. Senator McCain’s amendment was to one to require the expensing of stock options. I realize they are two different matters.

Mr. Levin. And that neither one addresses tax issues. That is a totally separate bill, not in either the McCain-Levin or the Levin-McCain accounting standard.

Mr. Allen. I say to the Senator that in the event you, in effect, require the expenses of stock options, that does affect the tax treatment and the desirability of stock options.

Mr. Levin. Thank you.

Mr. Allen. I thank the Senator from Michigan.

Now, the problematic aspect of these ideas is that, if you take away the current method of accounting and taxation of stock options, a company can only take a deduction up to the amount they expense at the time of the grant. Since the expense would be taken at the time of the grant, the tax deduction would be taken at the time of the exercise. If the value was too low when the options were first granted, they are not going to get the full extent of your deduction. So the point is that if we are not careful here, with all these approaches of changing the tax treatment, changing the expensing rules, or having it be done by FASB, the result will be a convoluted tax increase on companies.

Now, what will happen if these tax increases or this inability to actually determine the value of the stock option are not exercised at some unknown future date, all of this consternation, inaccuracy, unpredictability—the potential of actually a tax increase, in effect—many companies will find this tax and accounting scheme is not going to be attractive, or they will discontinue offering options to all but maybe a few senior executives who can bargain for them.

I think the idea of doing away with stock options, or making them less desirable, is a substantial detrimental impact on not only companies but many, particularly those companies in the high-tech sector and small startups. New businesses have powered our economy in the last decade and, hopefully, they will do so in the future. Small companies motivate employees with stock options. That is the way they keep employees. Especially the startups who will get folks to serve on the board and pay them for that service in stock options.

I think it is a good idea for people to care about a company doing well in the future, not only looking for a paycheck, but also caring about how well a company will do.

Indeed, in the last 10 years, the number of workers who received stock options has grown dramatically—from about 1 million in 1992 to 10 million today. First, as I said, the existence of stock options has enabled companies to recruit and keep quality workers. Absent stock options, many smaller companies lack the capital. They don’t have the money to attract top-notch talent. Investors will be less likely to invest in companies that retain stock option plans because the company’s earnings will be artificially deflated by this phantom expense.

In summary, and perhaps most important, stock options enhance productivity by providing employees with a greater stake in their company’s performance. Mr. President, these options are particularly important to rank and file employees who receive relatively modest salaries and wages. There is one company that has a pretty good presence in Virginia—Electronic Arts—which recently told me that stock options enabled many of its employees to purchase their first homes, to send their children to college, or to provide for their aging parents. Thus, the desirability of stock options as incentives is... readily apparent, and we should not adopt any measure that would effectively eliminate their use as a form of employee compensation.

That is not to say that I oppose all stock option reform. In fact, I fully support Senator LIEBERMAN’s proposal that requires shareholder approval for stock option plans. I think the idea of equitable treatment in the exercise of options by employees or executives is well founded. But I am joining with my colleagues to support this approach that we ought to take. The SEC will conduct an analysis and make regulatory and legislative recommendations on the treatment of stock options in which the Commission shall analyze the following: No. 1, the accounting treatment for employees’ stock options, including the accuracy of available pricing models; No. 2, the adequacy of current disclosure requirements to investors and shareholders on stock options; No. 3, the adequacy of corporate governance requirements, including shareholder approval of option plans; No. 4, any requirements, including shareholder approval of stock option plans; No. 5, any need for new stock holding period requirements for senior executives; No. 6, the benefit and detriment of any new option expenses rules on A, the productivity and performance of large, medium, and small companies and start-up enterprises and B, the recruitment and retention of skilled workers.

The Commission shall submit its regulatory and legislative recommendations to Congress and supporting analyses and alternative recommendations on the treatment of stock options within 180 days.

In my view, this is the reasonable alternative we ought to be taking. I urge my colleagues to support this approach rather than adopting, whether it is today or in the future, Senator MCCAIN’s measure that he introduced last week or Senator LEVIN’s study today. I think either of those would be harmful and damaging to both American industry and to working men and women.

The Senator from Michigan mentioned evidence, or observations, of others as to the impact of his recommendations and his amendment. I think it is very good for us to look at what people who will be affected say about the measures that are passed in the Senate. I think it is important that we be accountable to those who are affected and we should listen to them. I have some other observations, as far as the impact of stock options is concerned. This first I will share is the views of the Information Technology Industry Council. They expressed their support for the potential alternative amendment cosponsored by Senators LIEBERMAN, ENZI, BOXER, and ALLEN that would direct the Securities and Exchange Commission to examine the accounting treatment of stock options and make recommendations.

The Information Technology Industry Council stated that, in particular, those entrepreneurial high-tech companies that are willing to take the risk in the pursuit of technological innovation have offered stock options as an incentive to attract talented employees. Unfortunately, the expensing of options would end the practice of providing most employees with stock options. The result would be a reversal of the trends toward employee ownership and a significant reduction in financial opportunities for thousands of workers.

Let me share another observation, and this comes from the Telecommunications Industry Association, and I read, in part:

This sense of personal ownership referring to stock options helps develop the innovative entrepreneurial spirit that has characterized the high tech industry over the last decade. Black-Scholes models could be misleadingly simple and be treated as a cash expense, the number of employees that receive the benefit would be drastically reduced, most likely leaving only members of the top management as recipients.

They conclude with this comment:

Adoption of this type of measure is a knee-jerk reaction to situations such as occurred with the Burlington Northern case. It is not in the best long-term interest of our country.

Another observation from a large group of trade associations: American Electronics Association, Bankers Association, Alabama Information Technology Association, the Arizona Software and Internet Association, Biotechnology Industry Organization, Business Software Alliance, Information Technology Association of America, National Association of Manufacturers, the Retail Federation, Semiconductor Equipment and Materials International, as well as the Semiconductor Industry Association, Software and Information Industry Association, Software Finance and Tax Executives Council, the Tax Council, the Technology Network, and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce wrote me and said that the stock options tax bill—no the Levin amendment but, rather, the tax treatment changes—that legislation would, if enacted, discourage broad-based rank and file access to stock options. It would lead to investor confusion, less accurate financial statements, and raise taxes on companies issuing stock options. Now we have heard also some scholarly points of view. It is nice to hear what some of these esteemed individuals may say from time to time on the issue of stock options. Others in the body have quoted from Warren Buffett, a person renowned for his entrepreneurial spirit that rewards people who take risks, who are creative, who are innovative. That is what is going to improve our economy, our competitiveness as a country, as well as the stock market eventually.

The point is we do not need to come up with new, convoluted ways to increase taxes on companies that we want to invest in and improve our economy.
country, and I hope we will support the free enterprise system and, in doing so, look at reasonable, logical, wise, and fully comprehended decision-making as we move forward in these very uncharted waters of making major changes in stock options.

The bill I am about to extend now is an outstanding bill. There can be improvements made to it, such as the amendments of Senator Grassley and Senator Dorgan, but let us not have the perfect be the enemy of the very good, and let us not do harm. By fouling up stock options for many men and women working in this country, it would certainly do a great deal of harm.

I yield the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I think the Senator from Delaware was first to seek recognition.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I say to my friend from Iowa if he has a time constraint, I will yield to him. Just so he knows, I was in the Chamber before he came. I took a phone call and came back. But if the Senator has a time constraint, I have 10 to 12 minutes, but I will be glad to yield.

Mr. GRASSLEY. If I only have to listen to a 10- or 12-minute speech, I will be glad to wait.

Mr. BIDEN. The Senator listens very closely. He may learn something if I know I listen when I listen, and I do not always listen enough.

Mr. President, let me begin where the Senator from Virginia ended, and that is that I think the bill fashioned by Senator SARBANES and this committee does exactly what the Senator from Virginia was suggesting. That would be balanced; we do not do more harm than good.

If you look at other times—and I have been a Senator for a while—we faced crises such as this, we have had occasion to overreact. We have found sometimes that the cure is worse than the disease. I note we probably did that in my early days here with Senate campaign financing and other issues.

There is a real balance that the Senator from Maryland has struck. I compliment the Senator. I cannot think of any Senator better positioned to be chief spokesman for the Senate and Congress on this issue, not only for the American people as our allies and the investors worldwide.

The dollar now has weakened drastically. In my capacity as chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, I have had occasion to meet with leading government officials from European countries and from Asia, asking me, as if I were some kind of broker: Can we continue to invest in your market? Is it real? What is going on? How much more is coming?

We have to have the steady and always cautious voice of the Senator from Maryland, whose background academically as well as politically suits him well, and in this moment, as probably no one else in this place is better prepared, to take on this issue. I compliment the Senator and his quiet, reasoned voice, and his profound understanding of the problem we face as well as his determination to move ahead and try to restore confidence. It is a first-rate scientist, as well as corporate executive. I was meeting with him one day and said: We have a problem; we have got to move forward in these very uncharted waters of making major changes in stock options. That is why it was so important the Senate unanimously adopted my amendment last week and the amendment which was contained in that of the Senator from Vermont for stronger penalties for corporate executives.

In the hearings I have held in my criminal law subcommittee in the Judiciary Committee, I made clear from the outset—and I try never to overpromise what criminal law can do, even though we are only now finally beginning to rectify and make our criminal justice system reflect our values more clearly—that is not a solution. It is a part of a solution. The Senator from Idaho conditioned his support in that.

We have asked for stronger penalties. We have passed them. One small example: If you were to violate the Federal law relating to pension security, ERISA, it is a misdemeanor. Of course, those who have betrayed their entire pension or 1,000 people their pensions, totaling hundreds of millions of dollars. It is a misdemeanor. All you get is up to 1 year in jail. Yet if you steal my automobile—I live 2 miles from the Pennsylvania State line, in Delaware—and you drive across the State line into Pennsylvania, you get 10 years under Federal law. Something is awry.

Penalizing and deterring corporate crime, although it is a major part of our response to excesses committed by some of the most privileged and powerful corporate executives, is not enough.

The truth is that we are just rectifying this incredible inequity within our system. Hopefully we are beginning to reestablish some sense of faith in the system where average people think big guys get away with it and little guys go to jail.

It is the loss of trust in our system, most apparent, perhaps, in the recent drop in the stock market. More than 200 off the DOW in the days following the President’s speech, and when I came to the floor the DOW was down 300 points. I don’t know where it is right now. I hope and pray to God it has moved up.

The fact is, there is a profound lack of confidence at the moment in our economy. There used to be a chair of the board of the Dupont Company, a big, old farm boy from Ohio. He had great big hands. I remember, he was a wonderful guy, a first-rate chemist, first-rate scientist, as well as corporate executive. I was meeting with him one day and said: We have a problem; we are in the hole. And he turned and looked at me and said: My father always said, Joe, when you get in the hole, stop digging.

The President should stop making speeches for a couple of days. He has spoken twice and the market went down 500 points while he was speaking. It is not because of a lack of anything in the President, but people are looking for real change. They assume that if there is any rhetoric, it must not be likely to be followed by something real.

The Senator from Maryland has done something real. What the Senator from Utah did in his committee has done is real. This is real. This underlying bill is real; it is positive; it is substantial. The bottom line is, no pun intended, there is a profound lack of confidence at the moment and that our economy can be shaken right now to the very foundations of our market democracy. For a market democracy to work, we have to have faith in our economy that will continue to create opportunities for job advancement and that our Government will continue to act in the way our Constitution requires, the general welfare.

In recent months, to be reminded how much we have in common, how much of our unique blessings we have come to take for granted prior to September 11, we were reminded that the end we are all in this thing together. Among those blessings we had come to take for granted was the most dynamic economy in the world, that had just come off the longest, strongest expansion in history. In the new economic arena, we are now reminded how much we depend on trust in each other to make our markets work.

That sounds silly. No one was using the word when we were in the honeymoon of the market economy. We talked innovation, the new economy, productivity, et cetera, but when you cut it all aside, it is all based upon trust, which is based upon transparency. If you cannot trust each other and make your judgment to invest or not invest in a corporation with a clear sense that you have been told everything that is reasonable to tell you about the state of affairs of that company, then you might as well play the slot machines. You might well come on over to Delaware Park and play the slot machines at Delaware Park. You have about the same shot, unless you are on the inside.

The task we are debating today is how to restore the strength of our economy, which is to restore the trust. At the core of that task is revival of confidence that consumers and investors, including foreign investors, need to get back into the market.

This is going to turn around, Mr. President. You and I both know it. I am absolutely sure it is going to turn around. The question is, how many bodies will be littered along the way; how many pensions will be lost; how many jobs will be lost; how long is it going to take? It will turn around.

I am sure the greatest strength of our system continues to be its resiliency: Our ability to see change as opportunity. I think one of the blessings we have is the ability to think in this kind of adversity before. Every time we have come out stronger. I remember when the Senator from Maryland and I were on the Banking Committee in those dark days of the savings and loan crisis. We made it through. We made some very difficult decisions that, I might add, Japan and other countries have not made, and it resulted in an even stronger economy. So I am confident we can come out of this stronger.

After the glare from all the glitter during the boom phase and as our vision becomes a lot clearer, we know that our economy is, in fact, fundamentally stronger than it was, notwithstanding what is going on now. Productivity gains were real. Information technology and corporate reorganization created real growth. It was not imaginary. It was not like these profit margins that people were suggesting they had on the balance sheets that were a lie. There actually was growth.

The economy, the marketplace has created real growth. In what economists like me call real economy where jobs are created, where goods are produced, the real economy is faster and more efficient today than it was a decade ago. Even old industries in our manufacturing sector have gained from advances in new materials, as well as improvement in information sharing and organization.

We also know that a lot of what looked like growth, particularly in the financial sector, was only paper profits and a lot of it was written in disaster. The apparent capitalizations were all too often inflated by wishful thinking, by self-dealing analysts, by accounting gimmicks, and by outright fraud.

The amendment I am proud to support is strong by Senators LEVIN and CORZINE and others addresses one of the most glaring problems behind those inflated profit statements that fueled the stock boom that is now unwinding. Stock options are, as advocates tell us, a way to reward and motivate employees when companies are so young that they have little else to offer. Of course, we all want to encourage startup companies in every responsible way we can. Also, stock options in theory, and sometimes in practice, keep employees' and corporate officers' incentives tied to the growth of their companies, but unlike virtually every other kind of compensation the firm can give its employees, stock options do not have a financial report as an expense, and that means the more stock options you give, the less compensation you have to report, the lower your reported expenses, the higher your reported bottom line.

That part is simple, and that is a big reason stock options became so attractive not only for the good things they can do, but also for the convenient way they inflated earnings statements and I would even say, if I want to go overboard, even defending those corporate executives who when they take the train up to Wall Street and have some 30-year-old or 35-year-old guy sitting around a table saying: OK, what are you going to do next quarter? And giant companies that are strong and mature would say: We are going to do as well as last quarter. That is not good enough. We are going to downgrade your stock and your company.

I remember one CEO of a major Fortune 10 company telling me, I have to do one of three things: I have to say, so be it, and keep on the long-term course or go out there and find some new product on the shelf, which I wish I had, that could increase productivity and profit, or go home and do something. The "do something" usually meant go home and cut the number of employees you have, cut expenses.

Guess what, I do not think these are bad guys, and yet in many ways went home, and there is an easy way to do it. Let's make sure compensation is not reflected as an expense. So instead of paying the top executives an additional $15 million in compensation, guess what, the bottom line looked $15 million better than it did before. That is not rocket science, and it may have been produced by Wall Street's desire for immediate gratification, immediate response. Whatever the reason, it turned out to be as much of a liability in the literal sense, as much as a damaging impact as the good things it could do by tying the employees' fate as well as the CEO's fate to the views of their companies.

I see my friend from Utah standing. Does he want to ask me a question?

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BIDEN. I will be happy to yield. Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BIDEN. I will be happy to yield. The Senator is going into territory I will deal with in my statement, but to keep it all in context as he is talking, I must raise this question. The Senator is one of the historians of the Senate. He has been around long enough and probably will be around for longer than I will.

Does the Senator from Delaware remember that in 1993 when we increased taxes in the Clinton tax increase, we also put a limit of $1 million on the total amount of deductions a company could take for salary for its employees?

In other words, that CEO could not be paid over $1 million for his or her services and have the company deduct that as a legitimate expense for tax purposes.

Mr. BIDEN. To be honest with the Senator, I do not remember that.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the Senator agree that might have been part of the reason why companies, in an effort to attract and hold the best executive talent, would have moved away from traditional compensation, that the Senator and I both understood when we were growing up and applying for jobs, and into the more esoteric area of stock options because stock options were, in fact, not deductible; whereas, good old-fashioned pay for services rendered was given a tax disadvantage as a result of the Clinton tax bill?

Mr. BIDEN. In response to the Senator, I have to check more closely. I have great respect for my friend from Utah. Based on what he says, it seems to me it would have had a negative impact rather than a positive impact. That is one of the things we talk about at the front end.

Whatever we do here should have a positive impact. There is something else stock options do, too. Because stock options are predominantly awarded to top executives, they are a great way to give yourself a sweetheart deal, with a powerful incentive for excutives to look for ways to inflate stock prices so their stock options, at least for a while, are worth millions, even hundreds of millions of dollars.

Here is what Business Week said about stock options back in March:

Options grants that promised to turn caretaker corporate managers into multimillionaire in just a few years encourage some to ignore the basics in favor of pumping up stock prices.

And pump they did. Here is how much stock options distorted the bottom line for some of the biggest and best companies in America. One study by a London-based consulting firm, Smither and Company, looked at the use of stock options by 154 of the largest U.S. companies.

They found that those firms over-stated profits by 30 percent in 1993, 36 percent in 1995, 56 percent in 1997, and 50 percent in 1998.

Other analysts, including the Federal Reserve, have found the same thing.

These are huge distortions in the picture the public was given about these companies. The distortion in information investors were using to allo-capital. That kind of distortion was clearly a big factor, maybe in addition to what my friend from Utah says, in driving up those stock prices that are now falling back to Earth.

This is no simple problem. The 200 biggest firms now allocate more than 16 percent of their stock in options. Let me repeat that.

The 200 biggest firms now allocate more than 16 percent of their stock in options, mostly for their very top excutives.

The potential for distortion and the temptation to distort is great.

Remember these stock options are designed primarily to give top executives.

One study in 1998 found that 220 of the top managers at Fortune 500 firms received an average of 279 time the number of stock options awarded to each of the firms’ other employees.

Two hundred and seventy-nine times what ordinary employees got.

Despite the increased use of stock options this is clearly a device top management has largely preserved for Itself, and the kind of incentives they create are too clear.

This amendment takes what I believe is the most restrained and most careful approach to the problem of stock options.

It does not legislate accounting standards, and it does not dictate outcomes.

It tells the Financial Accounting Stan-ards Board that it is given new resources and new independence by the underlying Sarbanes amendment. It provides for FASB to come up with appropriate techniques to account for stock options, it does not dictate a one-size-fits-all at this moment, and it gives them a year to do it.

This is not about Government intervention this is about getting us out of the way of what every expert from Alan Greenspan to Warren Buffett and FASB itself says should be done.

It does nothing to interfere with the issuing of stock options.

It is about giving shareholders and investors the information they need to reassert their control over America’s corporations. That will help to promote companies’ long-term value, and reduce the temptation to pump up short-term stock prices.

This amendment can help promote a stronger form of stockholder democ-acy, to cure a system that a greedy few have turned to their own personal advantage. That kind of democracy needs openness and clarity—honest information to make informed decisions.

This amendment is real reform, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

I thank my friend from Utah for his intervention, and I thank my friend from Iowa for listening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sen-
or from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I yield to the Senor from Virginia, just to make a unanimous consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Nelson of Nebraska). The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my hour to Senator GRAMM, the Senator from Texas, who is the Republican manager of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sen-
or has that right. Time is yielded.

The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Before I forget, Mr.
President, I make the request that the unused portion of my hour that I will not be using here, I would like to also have given to the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senor has that right.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I have the temptation I filed. (i) An amendment providing for a team of oversight auditors; (ii) an amendment providing for prebankruptcy bonuses paid to top executives be pulled back into the bankrupt corporate’s estate;
(iii) an amendment providing the Security Exchange Commission with disgorgement remedies; (iv) an amendment providing that auditors who sell tax shelter products cannot opine on the financial effects of the tax shelter deal; and, (v) last, an amendment providing whistleblower protection to the accountants and others who want to disclose financial statement misconduct.

I am pleased, in regard to the last amendment I just announced about whistleblower protection, the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. HATCH) accepted that proposal as part of their amendment which has been adopted.

I am not going to speak about the other four. I am just going to speak about the first. This is the first amendment I put on my list, an amendment providing for a team of oversight auditors.

As I said, I congratulate my colleagues, Senators SARBANES and Enzi on their hard work in moving S. 2673 out of Committee and bringing the bill to the floor for further debate. The reform bill is a great step in the right direction and tackling some of the dif-cult accounting problems our Nation currently faces. Nevertheless, I believe the reform bill isn’t quite tough even on several issues and should be strengthened further, consequently, the amendment.

In my view, the recent rash of accounting scandals did not result from incompetency or lack of rigorous training of accounting professionals. Neithers have the problem lied principally with misguided auditing standards known as GAAS or ill-considered accounting rules known as GAAP.

The Worldcom debacle, among others, further demonstrated that the problem does not rest entirely with a company’s external auditors—whose failures may not detect financial misrepresentations if fraud is repeateadly covered up by corporate insiders or contrived to defeat established internal controls. Instead, each of the most recent corporate accounting scandals appears to have arisen from ingressiously bad behavior of corporate insiders and internal accountants—with varying degrees of complicity by those companies’ external auditors.

Thus, as a matter of principle, I agree with the “bad apples” theory being offered by many. However, I believe addressing those bad apples requires additional oversight—and not just of a company’s external accountants but of the internal accounting function itself.

To that end, I further respond to the President’s call for increased oversight and would like to offer an amendment that would strengthen the provisions Sarbanes-Enzi bill by expanding the powers of the oversight board to require the performance of “spot audits.”

The underlying bill which focuses on monitoring external auditors would be amended to provide additional board oversight of internal corporate accounting.

Specifically, my amendment would charge the Board with responsibility for conducting oversight audits or “spot audits” of public companies. The board would serve in a role analogous to the Internal Revenue Service or the Federal Bank Examiner. The IRS, for example, achieves voluntary public compliance through review of a very limited number of federal tax returns each year. The IRS does not verify each and every tax return. Similarly, the Federal Bank Examiner sporadically and randomly audits various banks throughout the country. Such “spot auditing” has been an extremely effective oversight tool for the banking industry and one which has resulted in prosecuting thousands of financial crimes. In similar fashion, I believe that accountants and corporate America will prepare more carefully their financial statements if exposed to the risk of compliance review by the board’s oversight auditors.

Even in self-regulated form, the accounting industry has long recognized the need for a second level of review. To this end, the SEC has established the peer review process by which one accounting firm would review audit work of another accounting firm. For example, Deloitte & Touche was for many years the assigned peer reviewer of Andersen, the industry-wide self-checking on top of industry self-regulation seems ill-conceived and has been widely critiqued for its effectiveness by lawmakers and the SEC.

Over the past 25 years, a Big Five accounting firm has never issued a qualified report against another Big Five accounting firm at the end of any peer review despite the subsequent discovery of numerous irregularities including numerous conflicts of interest from stock ownership in audit clients. This recognized need for a second level of review is longstanding although the mechanism originally established by the accounting industry seems to have proven largely inadequate.

Some way the Board should be granted powers which may be exercised currently by the SEC. The answer is simply resources. Providing an effective mechanism for spot checking the books of various issuers requires a dedicated staff to carry out those purposes. Having resources dedicated to a regulatory review process would allow the oversight board to take a proactive approach in reviewing for accounting irregularities and take the SEC out of a purely reactive posture with respect to corporate accounting fraud. The SEC has done a good job of investigating corporate scandals once detected. Unfortunately, by the time many of the recent scandals were discovered, things had progressed too far. We were unable to salvage the industries and the life savings of thousands of employees and shareholders. I believe the oversight board would provide a deterrent to committing fraud when coupled with tougher criminal sanctions. I further believe that earlier detection could prevent the absolute destruction of companies in which fraud remains uncovered for too long a period of time.

I note that the concept of an oversight board within the public oversight board was rejected in the accounting reform proposal offered by the SEC and Harvey Pitt on June 20. The draft emphasized that the SEC’s vision of a newly created public oversight board required the cooperation of audited corporations “only to the extent necessary to further . . . reviews or proceedings regarding the [audit corporation’s] accountant.” The draft further noted that the newly created oversight board would not conduct “roving investigations” of audited corporations nor would the board sanction those corporations. It occurs to me that by shifting exclusive focus and responsibility to accounting firms, we ignore the underlying behavior of corporate wrongdoers that have principal responsibility for fair and accurate financial reporting to corporate shareholders.

Under my newly created oversight board would be charged with reviewing the financial statements of issuers and focusing its resources on highest-risk audit areas and questionable accounting practices of all corporate issuers. This referral mechanism would provide those agencies continue to have primary authority and responsibility for conducting comprehensive corporate investigations of possible wrongdoing. The oversight board, of course, would augment investigations of possible wrongdoing with respect to the involvement of accounting firms into its jurisdiction.

That is a basic summary of what this amendment would accomplish. I urge the Congress to consider establishment of an oversight auditor as a means of improving the compliance of corporate issuers and their external accounting firms and detecting irregularities at a much earlier point in the system when a shareholder value remains salvageable.

It seems to me that my amendment comes down to just a simple case of common sense. As I think proven so many times before, auditors need to be audited. The SEC does not audit its auditor. I am referring to tax returns and in the same way bank examiners do it in the case of bank audits. If auditors know their work will itself be audited, they will think twice about looking the other way on shady deals, as we have seen. My amendment would put some very specific teeth in the Sarbanes-Enzi bill.

At this point, I was hoping the Senator from Texas was going to be here because I have done so much for him on a lot of issues. I support the tax bills, including the recent CARE bill and the recent energy bill. I have helped him with so many amendments that he wanted. I was sure he would be willing to help me get unanimous consent to get my amendment up, particularly in light of the fact that last week I was assured when it wasn’t on the list that it would be on the list. Then I came back and found that it meant being last on the list.

Now we are getting down to the end. I would like to have what I consider a commitment, although it probably is not an ironclad commitment, that I be on the list, and, obviously, I would be able to get a vote on my amendment.

At this point, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be laid aside for the purpose of taking up my amendment just described, which is amendment No. 1422.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ENZI. In light of the discussions, I have to object.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Was the President going to put my unanimous consent before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I did.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I did not hear the President do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming objects.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, before I yield the floor, I would like to have just a short discussion of something that bothers me. In the Senate, I think the President is hoping for a “November storm” in which our economy is weak and no progress is made on accounting reforms.

As this bill goes through the Senate, through conference, and comes back, I hope we will realize that there is enough blame to go around. But, most importantly, I think it is wrong. For instance, the distinguished majority leader on “Face the Nation” recently attributed the current crisis to the alleged “permissiveness” in the Bush administration towards business. I didn’t see any “permissiveness” in the President’s speech last week. I don’t think very many people did.

But I think we also need to remember, while a lot of this mischief was going on by corporations, that during the decades of the 1990s and now in the 21st century there were 2 years in which Democrats controlled Congress. In the two years when Republicans controlled Congress—1993-1994 and the Bush Presidency, there was a period of time when the Democrats controlled both Houses of Congress and the White House. That was 1993-1994. Then there were 6 years that Republicans controlled the Congress—1994-2000, and the Democrats controlled the Presidency.

Then there were 135 days last year that Congress was controlled by Republicans, and the President of the United States, but only 135 days out of a 12-year time frame if you want to use the 1990s plus now. And what has happened has happened on the watch of both Republicans and Democrats.
I think that to say a President has been President 18 months and this crisis before us is because of a “permissive” attitude in the Bush administration towards business just doesn’t hold water.

I have a chart behind me. I hope I am very clear in making this more accurate than what I just said. The yellow is the 2 years of the Bush administration going back to 1994, and the other color covers the Clinton administration. That fact about the Bush administration and the Clinton administration. Let’s just realize what the facts are.

In the case of Enron, it became public in the year 2001, but the restated earnings and the mischief went on all the way back to at least the beginning of 1997 because 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000, and the first two quarters of 2001 were restated earnings.

Adolph, or, for that matter, the same with stock options. I have reflected on this, and I think it has perhaps some value in this debate.

I made reference, in my colloquy with the Senator from Delaware, to the decision that was made by the Congress back in 1993 to put a limit on the amount of compensation that executives could receive in terms of traditional dollar salary. And the limit was $1 million.

I remember some of the rhetoric that flew around this floor at that time, filled this Chamber—how terrible it was that people were being paid these outlandish salaries and that somehow it would benefit the bottom of our economic ladder if there was a limit placed on those salaries.

And so recognizing that they could not outlaw the salaries, Congress could do the next best thing—or, if I might say, the next worst thing—and say: All right, they can pay themselves these big salaries, but, by George, we will not allow a tax deduction for anything over $1 million.

Then, recognizing that would probably produce all kinds of difficulties, Congress said: Except in a number of areas. And one of the areas of exceptions was that nonsalary compensation could exceed $1 million and be expensed if it were approved by the shareholders.

In my view, it was wrong inceptive to move towards stock options. After all, if you are running a public company and your services are worth $5 million or $10 million on the open market, you are not going to stay with the company if you get $1 million a year for the $1 million in cash if a competing company will come along and offer you the $5 million or $10 million you think you are worth in the form of other compensation.

So as we get lyrical around here about how terrible stock options are, and how stock options lead to all kinds of excess, we should remember that Congress, in its excess of enthusiasm for a form of wage and price controls, helped create a permissive attitude in the Bush administration.

We do not like to have institutional memory. We do not like to be held accountable for our actions or our 5 years after those actions are taken. But, in this case, I think it is appropriate for us to remember the past while we are getting so exercised about what it is we plan to do in the future.

If I might, Mr. President, be a little autobiographical for a moment. I would like to trace my own experience with stock options, I have reflected on this, and I think it has perhaps some value in this debate.

I was working for the JC Penney Company in the mid-1960s. I was interested, when I went to work for the Penney Company, to find out that company had a tremendously innovative and singular form of compensation: that is, no one in the company was paid more than $25,000 a year. One person could earn another $2,500 at the end of the year, I would have that $2,500 being at 7 percent. I would get my $10,000 salary, plus 93 percent of the additional $2,500.

For a form of wage and price controls, as in the case of the store manager I described but in the company that was legendary about managers who would get transferred from one Penney store to another. At the time, as I recall, the limit was not $25,000, it was $10,000. So $10,000 per year it was the maximum anyone in the company was paid. A store manager who was transferred from a relatively small store to a relatively large one in a large city was sure he was going to get a big raise. He got his first check, and it was for $10,000 a year. And he said: But my expenses are higher. I am running a store that is two or three times bigger. It doesn’t matter; you get $10,000 a year. At the end of the year, when they added up the profits of that store, he got a bonus based on the profits of the store he was managing, and the bonus was about $100,000. Well, he had an obvious incentive to see to it that store was profitable.

What does any of this have to do with stock options? That system was followed by the Penney Company that helped drive its growth all those years—where compensation was tied to performance, not only your personal performance but the company’s performance as well. In my own case—that program was scrapped. We went to a more traditional kind of compensation. As part of the traditional kind of compensation, we had stock options.

I am a bit comfortable with the old system because I remember 1 year where each point in the pool was worth $1.23. The company did much better than it had anticipated, and I got a 23 percent upward kick in my compensation.

I questioned: Why are we getting away from this because it seems to me this works?
The answer was: Wall Street requires it.

Well, that wasn’t enough of an answer for me. I said: What do you mean Wall Street requires it?

The Wall Street analysts at Wall Street have said to us, until you give stock options, we are not going to believe that you are serious about the future of your company because stock options are not tied to immediate profits. They are tied to future profits. And until you put some of your compensation to your executives and key employees in the form of stock options, we will not believe that you believe the future of your company is as bright as I think it is. We want them to have a stake in the future.

So as it was explained to me, in the scrapping of this unique compensation plan that I think the JC Penney Company was the only company in the country, if not the world, that followed this plan that I think the JC Penney Company is going to have a stake in the future.

We believe the future of your company is as bright as I think it is. If we want to put some of your compensation to your executives and key employees, we are not going to believe that you believe the future of your company is as bright as I think it is. We want them to have a stake in the future.

The point is, the compensation of employees should be tied to the future and not just the prosperity of the company. If not, the world, that followed this plan, you had to adopt some form of stock options. So they did adopt stock options. I didn’t stay around long enough to take them. I entered the Nixon administration in 1969 and gave up my vesting in a number of circumstances at the Penney Company. And again, as I say, the end of the year, when they sent me the money that had been accumulating in my behalf during the part of the year worked there, each point was worth $1.23. I said, well, once again, how much money would I have had if I had stayed at Penney instead of coming with the Government. That is a separate issue. I will not go into that road any further. I am glad I made the decision I made. I probably would not be a Senator if I had not.

The point is, the compensation of employees should be tied to the future and not just the prosperity of the company. The stock options were created with that in mind. What we have seen become, since 1993, when they were not available as part of an intelligent compensation mix, but they were made more valuable by tax treatment by the Congress making an accounting decision, what we have seen is that stock options have accumulated the bad name we have been hearing about here on the floor. I am not sure I agree with what has been said about how terrible stock options are, but I do recognize they have led to some excesses.

In the New York Times, on July 12, there was an editorial signed by Walter Cadette, a former dean at the Levy Institute of Bard College and retired vice president of J.P. Morgan. With a background at J.P. Morgan, in my view, he has a little bit more credibility than some of the people who write editorials for the New York Times. But the same point that has been going around the floor here in some of the rhetoric when he says:

Options...hold out the promise of wealth beyond imaging. All it takes is a set of books good enough to send a stock price soaring, if only for a while. If real earnings are not there, the compensation is an intelligent enough, in any case, for executives to cash out. This, in essence, is what happened at Enron, WorldCom, Xerox—indeed, at quite a long list of companies.

That is not congruent with the explanation about stock options I received back in the 1960s, when I had my first opportunity to participate in stock options in a Fortune 500 company. That is something that is new, that has come along.

So we are back to the fundamental question of this bill, which is, How do we account for the performance of a company in a way that will allow investors to make an intelligent judgment about the value of the company? That is the fundamental issue here. It is fundamental enough that I think I ought to repeat it: How do we account for the performance of the company in an accurate enough manner to allow investors to make an intelligent decision about the future of that company? Some will say to us: That is a very easy question to answer. Congressman GEPHARDT has been quoted in the press as suggesting that accounting is a science. It is a simple matter of black and white, of adding 1 and 1 and getting 2.

That is not the case, however much we would like to believe that is the case. Yes, when you are talking about some aspect of accounting for a company’s performance, it is a simple matter of adding up the numbers and reporting them. But in a company as complex as today’s modern industrial corporation, there are a whole series of judgment calls that must be made. It is not just a matter of adding up all of the sales. It is not just a matter of adding up all of the costs.

Back to my example of the JC Penney Company, this is a matter of a judgment call being made. What is the judgment of the value of this company if it does not trust its executives enough with stock options?

Analysts on Wall Street who are trained and experienced came to one judgment call: that the Penney Company was not worth as much without stock options as it would be with them—nothing whatever to do with the bottom line, nothing whatever to do with how many socks we sold or how many shoes we sold or how many shirts we sold. It was a judgment call on the value of the company based on accounting decisions.

Are we going to account for compensation strictly on the basis of the Penney Company’s system or are we going to make a judgment call based on stock options?

Well, the Penney Company did what it believed it had to do under those circumstances and, of course, went forward in its business. The point here is that there are judgment calls to be made every day in every circumstance with respect to accounting, and they will determine how the public, the investing public, will respond to the company that makes them.

That raises the question of what should those calls be and who should determine what those calls should be.

There is a term we use. It is called GAAP. It stands for generally accepted accounting principles. The very phrase itself defines what it is we are talking about. If we want to make an accounting decision as to what something is worth, we should make the decision within the parameters of GAAP; that is, we should make the decision on the basis that is generally accepted.

Let me give an example of what happens when you go outside the basis of what is generally accepted accounting principles. I was involved with an investor and he put out appropriate balance sheets, accounting information, profit and loss statements, and so on. He got a very angry call from one of the subinvestors. This was the kind of man who would sell shares in his overall project primarily to doctors and dentists.

He said to me once: I will not sell shares to lawyers. I said: Why not? Isn’t a lawyer’s money just as good as a doctor’s or a dentist’s money?

He said: No, because lawyers are trained to find problems and I don’t want sub-investors who sell all of their time to problems.

Well, he got a phone call from a physician who said to him:

I have looked at your financial information and you are lying to me.

He said: What do you mean I am lying to you?

He said: It is right here in your documents. You said this particular venture made X hundreds of thousands of dollars last year. Now you have given me your financial statements and I have found out you didn’t make a penny.

The man said: What are you talking about?

He said: I have it right here. Here is a list of your assets and a list of your liabilities and they match each other to the exact cent. You didn’t make any money.

Well, generally accepted accounting principles say that a balance sheet always has to balance, that the number on one side and the accounting on the other side must equal each other to the penny. This man did not understand generally accepted accounting procedures, he wanted to keep books a different kind of way, and he was misled. The solution, of course, was to educate him on what those generally accepted accounting procedures ought to be. Once he generally accepted what those procedures were, he could read the profit and loss statement, the balance sheet, and he could discover that the numbers did add up to him and that, in fact, the venture had made several hundreds of thousands of dollars that year.
Now, let’s come to Wall Street, let’s come to Enron, let’s come to all of the things that we are talking about here. One of the things we have heard in many of the hearings that I have attended on this subject is that if you were a sophisticated analyst of financial statements, you would face and find all of the information that you needed in the footnotes of the various financial statements that were published. You did not need the kinds of disclosure that this bill is calling for.

We went through that, listened to that testimony, listened to the people who made that point, and came to the conclusion that they are right. If you are sophisticated enough to be able to go through every single footnote, examine every single side comment, and plow through all of the boilerplate that makes up a standard financial release, you could create an accurate picture of that corporation—except in those cases where there was outright fraud. In my opinion, that is a case of outright fraud, not a case of hiding things in footnotes; it was a case of lying.

Quite frankly, there is nothing we can do in this Chamber, or anywhere else in a legislative forum, to stop people who want to cheat. If that is what they are going to lie to, who are determined they are going to commit fraud. That will happen no matter what kind of a bill we pass. We can raise the penalty and thereby discourage it a little more—and they are proposals to do that—but we cannot stop it. If someone is determined he is going to break the law, and he thinks he can lie and get away with it, he will still do it regardless of the bills that we pass here.

But what we can do, what we should do, and what this bill is crafted to do is to make it easier for the ordinary investor to understand what a company is worth, make it so that the generally accepted accounting principles conform to the understood activities with respect to the business world.

The question is, how can we establish accounting rules that will make it possible for the ordinary investor to understand what is going on and not restrict understanding to those who can read the footnotes, who can decipher all of the boilerplate. I don’t think we will ever get there in a perfect world. Life being what it is, with the lawyers coming in and requiring careful terms of art to be spelled out, we will never get there. We will get to the point where someone who does not have any kind of legal understanding of the terms of art can read this as easily as he or she could read Harry Potter. However, we can move in that direction, and I feel this bill does so movement.

The one thing that we should be most careful of, however, is to avoid having Congress set the accounting rules. Why? If Congress sets the accounting rules, Congress becomes essentially a king—using a phrase we use here derivatively sometimes—like an act of Congress to turn that around. And having set the rules, Congress is very reluctant to come back in an act of Congress and change them. But if the rules are set by the regulatory bodies over which Congress exerts some oversight responsibility, they can be changed much more easily as more information comes along and as people begin to discover that what they did previously maybe doesn’t make as much sense.

I offer as exhibit A Congress’s action to outlaw the deductibility of cash compensation above a million dollars—something that, in retrospect, now looks like it was a pretty stupid thing for us to have done. But we have done it, and the chances of trying to get a bill through that would undo it are very slim. If we stay out of the business—we in Congress—of making these kinds of accounting decisions, we will be better off, the economy will be better off, more people will keep their jobs, et cetera.

Let me close on that particular subject with that particular idea in mind. Congress, from time to time wants to step into the marketplace, repeal the law of supply and demand, and assert our judgment over the judgment of the marketplace. I have said many times, and will say many more, I can add to what we have carved in marble around here, I would say: “You cannot repeal the law of supply and demand.” But we keep trying to do it with wage and price controls. We keep trying to repeal that, and we tried to do it in 1958 when we said we will do something about the excessive compensation of executives. We won’t say that the marketplace and the law of supply and demand will determine what people get paid; we will legislate it. We will legislate it with tax policy. We will do some social engineering through tax policy. We keep trying to do that all the time, and it almost always produces a perverse effect.

Let me address this question of overwhelmingly big salaries and compensation—as if there was something really evil about that, really corrupting about that. Maybe there is, in terms of the impact that that sort of compensation has in the lives of an individual, but it is the marketplace at work.

Let me give an example with which I think everybody might be familiar. I am not talking about Jack Welch, the CEO of General Electric, with that company during the time he had it in his stewardship, would you look back on that total period and say Jack Welch too much money? Or would you look back on the amount of the value of General Electric that was generated under his stewardship and say he was a bargain; he was a steal; we could have paid him twice what we paid him and still come out well ahead?

You say: But look at all of the executives who flew their companies right into the sea. Look at the executives who destroyed the quarterback that they got this same amount of money.

If I may go back again to the sports world, have we not seen sports teams pay very large salaries, responding to the law of supply and demand, for coaches who had losing seasons? For quarterbacks who ended up being on the waiver list? Those of us in the Washington, DC, area have had a lot of experience with quarterbacks. Does that mean we are going to stop trying to get the right quarterback for the Washington Redskins. We can figure that out with accounting. But what these chief executive officers are being paid is obscene.

If you are a shareholder of General Electric, Mr. President, and you looked at what Jack Welch, the CEO of General Electric, did with that company during the time he had it in his stewardship, would you look back on that total period and say Jack Welch too much money? Or would you look back on the amount of the value of General Electric that was generated under his stewardship and say he was a bargain; he was a steal; we could have paid him twice what we paid him and still come out well ahead?

You say: But look at all of the executives who flew their companies right into the sea. Look at the executives who destroyed the quarterback that they got this same amount of money.

If I may go back again to the sports world, have we not seen sports teams pay very large salaries, responding to the law of supply and demand, for coaches who had losing seasons? For quarterbacks who ended up being on the waiver list? Those of us in the Washington, DC, area have had a lot of experience with quarterbacks. Does that mean we are going to stop trying to get the right quarterback for the Washington Redskins? By saying we will pay them average salaries in the National Football League so that there will not be any more of these obscene salaries and failures.

Several things will happen if the Washington Redskins take that point of view. No. 1, they will start to lose even more than they have lost in the past. And, No. 2, the fans will stop coming and the savings that you will make in buying a quarterback that you can get for $400,000 or $500,000 a year, compared to the one that you are gambling $10 million or $20 million on will all disappear as the ticket sales fall off, the television revenue disappears, and people do not want to come anymore.

Yes, there have been corporate executives who have been vastly overpaid. There have been CEOs who have been hired off of their reputation, just as football coaches who have been hired on the basis of their reputation, who, to lure them into the company, have been given great packages and then failed to deliver. But there are also examples of this world who have turned out to be bargains no matter how much they were paid.

Who should make the decision as to how much they should be paid? The answer is, The marketplace should do it. The law of supply and demand should do it. Someone who has demonstrated that he or she has the capacity to build, maintain, and expand a corporation with tremendous value for the shareholders is someone who can demand very high salaries because he or she is in very short supply.

We can complain all we want to about the social inequity of a CEO who is earning $20 million, $30 million, $40 million, and someone who is working in that company for minimum wage, but it is the same principle as saying: Look at the difference between Wayne Gretzky down on the ice earning $20 million, $30 million, $40 million a year, and someone selling hot dogs in the stands. If Wayne Gretzky were not on the ice, there would not be anybody in the stands to buy the hot dogs. Wayne Gretzky and his skills are in much shorter supply than someone who can stand in the stands and sell hot dogs.

We should not in our frenzy in this whole debate get so carried away with our desire to deal with those who have damaged the system by their failure to live up to their responsibilities that we, once again, make any statements that would cause us to try to repeal the law of supply and demand.

I see my colleagues are seeking recognition. Senator Enzi from Wyoming, have a right to yield time. The Senator from Nevada. Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, at the end of my remarks, I will yield whatever time the Senator from Texas can receive.

Mr. President, I want to talk about something a little different than what we have been talking about today, although I have very strong feelings about the bill and think that both the managers of the bill, along with Senator Enzi from Wyoming, have done a terrific job in addressing some very serious problems out there. I still believe there are a few problems with the bill we need to clean up in conference.

I do think the overall legislation has some positive reforms that must be implemented to try to restore some confidence back in the investing public.

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to conclude. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, it is also my understanding that the Senator from Nevada is going to yield an hour to the manager of the bill; is that right?

Mr. ENZI. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Or whatever time is left.

Mr. ENSIGN. Yes.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I understand he has a right to do that; is that true?

Mr. ENSIGN. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to yield time. The manager of the bill may receive up to 44 additional minutes. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, at the end of my remarks, I will yield whatever time the Senator from Texas can receive.

Mr. President, I want to talk about something a little different than what we have been talking about today, although I have very strong feelings about the bill and think that both the managers of the bill, along with Senator Enzi from Wyoming, have done a terrific job in addressing some very serious problems out there. I still believe there are a few problems with the bill we need to clean up in conference.

I do think the overall legislation has some positive reforms that must be implemented to try to restore some confidence back in the investing public.

The law of supply and demand should do it. The true answer is, The marketplace should do it.

Past history tells us Congress can act in a hurry but repent at great leisure. Past history tells us Congress can act in a hurry but repent at great leisure. Mr. GRAMM. We have a unanimous consent request and a request for the yeas and nays to the Edwards amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order to request the yeas and nays. Mr. GRAMM. I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to request the yeas and nays on both pending amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is in order to seek the yeas and nays at this point.
have come up with that balance. Basically, the way the program would work is, every senior on a voluntary basis would be able to get a prescription drug discount card. For a $25 annual fee, they would sign up and get this prescription drug discount card. They would be responsible for their prescription drugs, and all seniors would save because of volume discount buying. We would use the private sector to do this. They would save, on average, 25 to 40 percent on their drugs. That is a huge saving right up front that every senior could achieve.

On top of that savings, seniors up to 200 percent of poverty would next spend, on average, about $100 a month out-of-pocket; then after that, other than a very small copay, the Federal Government would cover the rest of their prescription drug costs.

This is what seniors are looking for. In my campaign in the year 2000, I took this plan all over the State of Nevada and talked about how there were low-income, moderate-income, and higher income seniors groups about it. I told them that people who are in the lower income bracket are going to get most of the benefit, and for people in the higher income bracket, it is going to cost them more money, as it should.

In some of the other programs, no matter whether one is a lower income or higher income senior, they basically are treated the same. I personally do not think that someone that is in his income category should be treated the same as somebody who makes $15,000 a year. There should be some difference. Under our bill, there is a great difference in the way those two categories of people would be treated.

The reason our bill is less costly to the taxpayer is one simple fact: All the other bills give a percentage of first dollar coverage. Whether it is 50 percent or whatever the coverage, after a very high deductible, they all are covering right away. Our bill says the senior is going to pay about the first $100 a month out of pocket, and then after that, our coverage kicks in.

About 50 percent of the seniors do not have $1,200 worth of prescription drug costs per year, so about half the seniors, other than the discounts they will get because of the prescription drug discount card, actually will not use it. But, frankly, most seniors can afford about $100 worth for prescription drugs. It is for that diabetic patient or that heart patient or that cancer patient who has maybe about $500, or $300, or $400, or whatever it is, a month that they are paying in current prescription drug costs. These are the people that really cannot afford these prescription drugs, and our bill helps that person much more than most of the other plans.

The reason our bill saves so much money is that we keep the patient accountable for their drugs they are getting. They do not have somebody else paying for it and as they get the benefit. That is one of the biggest problems we have with our current health care system: There is no accountability with patients. They are receiving the benefit regardless of the cost, and so they do not think about shopping because somebody else is paying the bill. We do not have market forces working in the health care field today, and if we enact a prescription drug benefit without utilizing market forces, some day we are really going to regret it because we will have severely out of control costs.

The bill we have introduced, we believe, is more fiscally responsible and targets most of the benefit for those who truly need it the most. We can enact it a lot more quickly than some of the other programs, and it is permanent. It is because of those factors that we believe this bill is the bill that our colleagues should take a look at supporting.

We would be happy to meet with anybody to talk to them about the bill and possibly about cosponsoring the bill. Do not be turned off because one political party may be offering one bill and the other party offering another bill. We are offering an alternative to either of those bills, and we think this bill, with fiscal responsibility to the taxpayer, is the bill that people should support.

In closing, I look forward to engaging in a meaningful debate on prescription drugs after we deal with this accounting issue and this issue is so important, and I see my friend from Wyoming who has done so much work on the bill, and I applaud him and the others who have worked on this bill. But later in the week as we are debating this prescription drug benefit proposal, we need to take a serious look and not play politics because seniors cannot afford for us to play politics with the prescription drug issue. We need to work together in a bipartisan, rather, in a nonpartisan fashion, so seniors can get the help they so deserve.

I ask unanimous consent that under the provisions of rule XXII, I may yield what time I can yield back to Senator Gramm. I understand it is 44 minutes, and I yield that amount of time to Senator Gramm.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. Cantwell). The Senator has that right.

The Senator from Georgia, Mr. Kennedy. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. Cleland. I am happy to yield. Mr. Kennedy. We have had two speakers from the other side. I ask unanimous consent to follow the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Wyoming, Mr. Enzi. Reserving the right to object, and I will not object some of us who have been on the floor all this time waiting to speak, as well. We hope for a chance to speak before we reach the end of the day.

I will not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. Cleland. Madam President, I ask recognition to discuss my amendment No. 4236. This addresses the accountability of corporate officers and directors. I strongly support the legislation before us which addresses the critical need to create an environment of accountability within corporate America. We need to send a strong message to corporate executives that the days of living large while lying, cheating, and stealing from the American people are over.

Control of a company certainly has its advantages, but it also carries important obligations and duties. My amendment would address a situation like Enron where officers cashed in on bonuses, severance packages and millions of dollars in stock sales as they saw the light of the train coming through the tunnel. Unfortunately for thousands of Enron employees and investors, they had no similar warning and were not able to bail themselves out before many lost not just their jobs, but their life savings as well. My amendment would make sure that officers and directors who know that financial reports are being manipulated, can’t cash in on this knowledge while leaving employees and investors holding the bag. It is the duty of officers and directors to know what is happening in the corporation and to blow the whistle when they know there is wrongdoing.

In the case of Enron, 10 executives or directors joined CEO Ken Lay and Chief Financial Officer Andrew Fastow in siphoning off company proceeds and reaping millions of dollars when they sold their Enron shares high. Together these 12 individuals made stock profits totaling more than $30 million before the company took a public nose dive at the end of last year. These corporate high rollers were reaping huge profits at the same time thousands of hard working Americans were losing more than a billion dollars in retirement savings, including $127 million in lost retirement savings in my home State alone by teachers and State employees.

Corporate greed, should not be rewarded. The underlying bill requires that when a corporation has to file a restated financial report because of the misconduct in the original report, the CEO and CFO have to give back any profits they have made from bonuses and stock sales for a year after the original report. My amendment would expand on the bill by calling into account all officers and directors who know about the misconduct in filing the financial report and through that knowledge abuse the company’s trust and the trust of their employees. It would also mandate that officers and directors who had knowledge of wrongdoing in their financial reports would not only have to give up bonuses and profits but also their severance packages. Why should someone like Jeff Skilling get a parachute as he balls out of a disaster he helped to create?

This amendment, my amendment, deserves support. It is endorsed by Arthur Levitt, one of this nation’s most distinguished financial authorities. It is high time the courts pull the carpet and hold them accountable. It is time we create an atmosphere that encourages responsible behavior and restores the confidence of the American people in the economy of this country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Massachusetts is to be recognized.

Mr. KENNEDY. I am happy to yield.

Mr. REID. I will take a couple of minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. I guess I just yielded the floor.

I yield to the Senator and ask recognition afterwards.

Mr. KENNEDY. I have had some very long speeches by those on the other side and I thought it appropriate we respond.

The ranking member of the Finance Committee had all these charts indicating that all the problems were not the ones that caused this administration. The fact is, we realize there is a lot of blame to go around. With do not try to whitewash this issue.

The fact is, the President of the United States appointed the SEC Commissioner, who, adorned in the heartburn, he wanted a friendlier, a more gentle Securities and Exchange Commission.

That statement speaks for itself.

We also have to understand that actions speak louder than words. What I mean is, we have a Federal Government today, this administration, that is basically run like corporate America. That has to change. That is what this legislation is all about.

What we are is a situation where the President of the United States is being written up in editorials all over the country and news articles throughout the country over his dealings with stock, borrowing money that basically, he did not have, to pay back the principal until you sell your stock, borrowing money that basically was never felt better about the company.

That has to change. That is what this legislation is all about.

I believe we have a situation that cries out for passing this legislation as quickly as possible. This administration must step forward and recognize they are part of the problem, until they start talking about supporting this legislation, as I understand the President did today. I think that is wonderful and he is going to help us get this through conference. I think that is important. I would like to see it before the August recess. It is important this legislation move forward.

Actions speak louder than words. This administration has to do more than talk about what needs to be done. They have to work with us in solving the problems of corporate America today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, there are many important provisions in this legislation to increase corporate accountability. I had hoped to offer an amendment to make workers’ retirement plans whole again when the corporate executives cheat.

After the collapse of Enron—the largest bankruptcy in U.S. history—the President and many Republicans in Congress suggested that it was an isolated example of corporate wrongdoing. Since that time, the nation has witnessed a continuing series of corporate scandals which have demonstrated otherwise.

The lack of corporate responsibility in the United States has undermined the credibility of our markets and devastated the retirement savings of millions of Americans. This widespread misbehavior has also jeopardized our nation’s economic recovery and hurt the legitimacy of our fundamental institutions. We must take bold action this week to ensure that corporations are made accountable and that workers and investors are protected against these abuses.

In the past month, we have seen a jury criminally convict the Arthur Andersen accounting firm for engaging in the obstruction of justice to cover up the Enron debacle. We have seen WorldCom admit that it wrongly reported its true financial condition by nearly $4 billion. Just last week, the Wall Street Journal reported that Merck recorded $12.4 billion in revenue from a subsidiary that it never actually collected.

In response to these scandals, the President gave a speech last week, which the White House likened to the words of former President Teddy Roosevelt. Unlike our nation’s great trustbuster, the President failed to lay out a comprehensive plan to restore America’s confidence in our economic system.

Hard-working Americans and their families have suffered immensely as a result of these scandals and the failure of the Administration to take decisive action. Workers have lost their jobs, their health benefits, and their retirement savings. Today, over 47 million workers rely on 401(k) plans and the stock market for retirement security. We can’t wait for the next report of corporate fraud, the next round of layoffs, and retirement losses before we take serious action.

This week, corporate scandals is underlining the confidence of investors in the U.S. economy. Mutual fund investors have lost about $700 billion just in the last 15 months. In May of this year, new investments in stock funds declined by nearly two-thirds from the previous month. As foreign investors lose confidence in the transparency of U.S. corporations, these investors are pulling out of the U.S. market and the dollar slipping against foreign currency. With a 5.9 percent unemployment rate, America’s workers can ill afford to have their economic prospects dimmed by corporate corruption.

This time—fact its long past time—to pass tough new laws to prevent future abuses of corporate power. We must reform our accounting system, enact criminal penalties for corporate wrongdoers, and pass new protections for workers.

Senator SARBANES’ accounting bill is critical to reforming our public accounting system and ensuring transparency and accountability for corporations in the United States. The legislation creates an independent, bipartisan oversight board; it restricts the non-audit services than an accounting firm can provide to the public companies that it audits; it holds corporate executives responsible for the accuracy of corporate financial statements; it requires companies to report to corporate insiders to report stock sales and corporate loans to the SEC; and it provides additional resources to the SEC to improve its investigation and enforcement capabilities. We all owe a debt of gratitude to Senator Paul Sarbanes for shepherding this legislation through the Banking Committee and bringing it before the Senate.

In addition to these accounting reforms, we must hold corporate executives accountable when they mislead workers and undermine their retirement security. At Enron, executives cashed out more than a billion dollars of stock while Enron workers lost nearly a billion dollars from their 401(k) retirement plans. This past year alone, Enron workers lost virtually all of their retirement savings. Enron executives got rich off stock options even as they drove the company into the ground and systematically misled workers about the true financial state of the company. Ken Lay now has a pension of nearly half a million dollars a year for life. Many Enron workers have nothing at all.

These are all statements that were made by Mr. Lay. Ken Lay’s lies encouraged workers to buy Enron stock at $49. He “never felt better about the prospects of the company.” He predicted to employees a “significantly higher stock price,” saying it was an incredible bargain as it was going down. Mr. Lay has a pension of nearly half a million dollars a year. At WorldCom, the workers lost more than half of their retirement savings as the stock dropped from $60 to just 6 cents. Workers across the country also lost a billion dollars from the Enron bankruptcy. The brave firefighters and police officers of New York City lost $100 million from their pension fund.
Over 20,000 workers have been laid off in the last few weeks because of the actions of WorldCom executives. Yet, those same executives made out like bandits. Former WorldCom CEO Bernie Ebbers is guaranteed a million and a half dollars for the rest of his life while WorldCom workers face a bleak financial future.

Sadly, Enron and WorldCom are not just isolated tales of corporate greed that hurt America’s workers. At Kmart, 22,000 workers were laid off. At Lucent, almost 10,000 workers were laid off. At Tyco, over 13,000 workers were laid off. At At Xerox, over 13,000 workers were laid off. At Tyco, almost 10,000 workers were laid off. At Global Crossing, over 9,000 workers were laid off.

These corporate debacles reveal a much deeper crisis of corporate values. In America, people who work hard all their lives deserve retirement security in their golden years. It is wrong—dead wrong—to expect Americans to face poverty in retirement after decades of hard work.

For far too long, corporate executives have been obsessed with their own compensation instead of the long-term health of the companies they lead. Executives, like those at Enron and WorldCom, pushed their workers to buy companies, pushed its workers to buy company stock with their own 401(k) contributions. They must not be rewarded for doing so. At Enron, workers were systematically misled by Enron executives about the financial situation of the company. For years, Enron, like many other companies, pushed its workers to buy company stock with their own 401(k) contributions.

Until the bitter end, Enron executives continued to promote Enron stock to workers in a series of e-mails. On August 14, Enron CEO Kenneth Lay told workers that he “never felt better about the prospects for the company.” On August 27, Lay predicted to workers a “significantly higher stock price.” And on September 26, Lay called Enron stock “an incredible bargain.” Even as they promised the moon, Lay and other executives were cashing out their stock for a billion dollars.

If Enron and WorldCom scandals teach us anything, it’s that we must stop rewarding corporate misbehavior.

Our amendment—it is cosponsored by Senator Gregg of New Hampshire—makes it clear that executives who give workers misleading information about the company stock in their 401(k) plans face serious penalties. The amendment is the civil law parallel to the Leahy criminal provisions, which punish executives for defrauding investors. The amendment is also the ERISA civil law parallel to the Biden amendment, which increases the ERISA criminal penalties. When executives lie and mislead workers about company stock, they must face real penalties.

Under current pension law, Enron executives, like Ken Lay, and Arthur Anderson, cannot be held responsible for workers’ losses in their 401(k) plan. The amendment makes a corporate “insider”—an officer or director or the independent public accountant—responsible under pension law if the insider misleads workers about the company’s stock.

America’s workers need this amendment to hold Ken Lay and other executives engaged in wrongdoing accountable. The amendment empowers workers to seek restitution when executives knowingly abuse workers’ pensions. If workers lose their retirement savings due to deliberate corporate mismanagement, then they should have the right under our laws to hold those top executives accountable in a court of law, and recover what they lost.

This right could make the difference for a family between an impoverished retirement and a comfortable retirement that they earned.

The economic health of our nation depends on reigning in the abuses of corporate power. What we have witnessed in recent months. Restoring the credibility of accounting standards, as the Sarbanes bill would do, is critical to restoring confidence in our markets. At the same time, we must also restore basic fairness.

When corporations like Enron fail because of executive wrongdoing, corporate executives get golden parachutes but workers are left with a tin cup when it comes to their retirement. Corporate criminals must be made to pay for their misdeeds.

We see from this chart what has happened: Ken Lay, $457,000 a year for life, retirement savings were decimated, 4,200 layoffs; former WorldCom CEO, Bernard Ebbers, $1.5 million a year, retirement savings were decimated, 22,000 layoffs; former WorldCom CEO, Bernard Ebbers, $1.5 million a year, retirement savings were decimated, 22,000 layoffs.

This has to stop. Today we have a critical opportunity to protect workers and investors against future abuses of corporate power. We must not let these hard-working Americans down.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the pending amendment in order that I may offer the Kennedy-Gregg amendment, which I send to the desk at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAMM. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The Senator from Massachusetts retains the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, I have heard objection. We tried to get this amendment up during the period of the last week and were closed out. It is a simple amendment. It is an amendment that can do more to protect workers’ interests than many other proposals when it comes to their retirement. It would give workers misleading information about the company stock.

This amendment is the civil law parallel to the Biden provisions. We were unable to get the opportunity to have the consideration because we were foreclosed from that opportunity at the end of last week and we are getting objections this week.

I think that is unfortunate. As I understand it, the most current support for this is overwhelmingly among Republicans and Democrats alike across this country. They understand. It doesn't take a lot of debate or dis- cussion to understand what accountability is all about. Under the existing laws, they can only have accountability, not for those who are at the CEO level, who are really the ones making the judgment calls. We want to help workers who are relying, but they would only be able to sue lesser figures in the corporate ladder. Therefore, this is not an effective remedy for workers.

We are trying to provide an effective remedy for workers who are being shortchanged. It makes eminently good sense. It is eminently fair. It is eminently responsible. It is eminently relevant. But there has been objection to it.

I want to give assurance to the Senator that we look forward to offering this amendment at another time at the first opportunity.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator BYRD be recognized at 5 until 15 after the hour to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INSIDER TRADING

Mr. GRAMM. S. 2673 includes provisions prohibiting insider trading of company stock during so-called blackout—or periods during which pension plan participants are unable to exercise control over the assets in their accounts. In order to implement the insider trading prohibition, it was necessary to provide a definition of a blackout period. The Banking Committee also provided a 30-day notice requirement prior to a blackout, so workers and executives alike would know when the insider trading prohibition would be effective.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, there appears to be broad consensus that pension plan administrators should be required to provide 30 days’ notice to affected participants before limiting their ability to exercise the rights provided through their pension plans. These advance blackout notices will become integral requirements for how pension plans will operate in the future. Because of this, notice requirements were incorporated both in the pension bill reported by the Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions, HELP, Committee on March 21, and in the bill reported by the Finance Committee unanimously on May 11.

Mr. GREGG. I agree with the Senator from Iowa. Although the general concepts are agreed upon, however, there are differences between these provisions in all three bills that affect the operations of pension plans, and will clearly need to be worked out before the bill is sent to the President’s desk. Harmonizing these requirements will require a careful balance between the rights of pension participants and the financial burdens on plan administrators.

Mr. KENNEDY. I certainly agree with the remarks of my colleagues. My bill provides plan blackout provisions with written notice 30 days before a plan blackout begins, and prohibits the blackout period from extending for an unreasonable time. This important disclosure to plan participants is within the jurisdiction of the HELP Committee.

Mr. BAUCUS. I also agree with the remarks of my colleagues. As chairman of the Finance Committee, which also has jurisdiction over pension plans, I join the chairman of the HELP Committee and the ranking member of both the Finance and HELP Committees in urging the chairman and ranking member of the Banking Committee to work with us as you go to conference on S. 2673, to ensure that the blackout provisions are drafted in such a way as to ensure the proper operation of the pension system.

Mr. SARBAINES. I look forward to consulting with both the Finance Committee and the Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee as we go to conference to make sure the provisions are appropriately drafted.

CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY FOR FINANCIAL REPORTS

Mr. GRAHAM. Section 302 of S. 2673 involves Corporate Responsibility for Financial Reports. I am concerned that in subsection (b), where the CEO and CFO sign documents to verify the accuracy of financial reports, the bill’s language says they shall “certify” the accuracy of the financial documents. In my view, this language should read “certify under oath” in order to be consistent with current Securities and Exchange Commission, SEC, regulations. You can clearly see that the SEC currently requires that these statements to be under oath. Let’s not create a lower standard in this bill than currently exists in regulation.

Mr. SARBAINES. I appreciate the Senator’s interest, and I hope his concerns can be addressed in conference.

Mr. GRAHAM. I thank the Senator for his assistance on this issue and his leadership on this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that Exhibit A of the order be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Exhibit A—Statement Under Oath of Principal Executive Officer and Principal Financial Officer Regarding Facts and Circumstances Relating to Exchange Act Filings

I, [Name of principal executive officer or principal financial officer], state and attest that:

(1) To the best of my knowledge, based upon review of the current [company name], and, except as corrected or supplemented in a subsequent covered report, no covered report contained an untrue statement of a material fact necessary to make the statements in the covered report, in the light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading as of the end of the period covered by such report (or in the case of a report on Form 8-K or definitive proxy materials, as of the date on which it was filed); and no covered report omitted to state a material fact necessary to make the statements in the covered report, in the light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading as of the end of the period covered by such report (or in the case of a report on Form 8-K or definitive proxy materials, as of the date on which it was filed).

(2) I have reviewed the contents of this statement with [the Company’s audit committee] [in the absence of an audit committee, the independent members of the Company’s board of directors], and to the best of my knowledge, the statements made therein are true and accurate.

(3) In this statement under oath, each of the following, if filed on or before the date of this statement, is a “cascading effect” [identify most recent Annual Report on Form 10-K filed with the Commission] of [company name].

all reports on Form 10-Q, all reports on Form 8-K and all definitive proxy materials of [company name] filed with the Commission subsequent to the filing of the Form 10-K identified above; and any amendments to any of the foregoing.

GUIDANCE TO STATE REGULATORY AUTHORITIES

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to ensure that State regulators do not automatically apply the provisions of this bill to accounting firms, particularly small accounting firms and firms that service small businesses without first looking at the possible harmful unintended consequences to small businesses. The standards applied by the board under this act could create undue burdens and cost if applied to nonpublic accounting companies and other accounting firms that provide services to small business clients.

Mr. GRAMM. I agree with my friend, the Senator from Nevada, and want to add that what we need to avoid is a possible cascading effect, starting with the Federal Government, that could eventually hurt the small accounting businesses in this country.

Mr. ENSIGN. Many of these small businesses rely on their CPA or auditor to provide objective, trusted advice and counsel on a broad range of tax and business related issues. Without this amendment, we will end up harming thousands of American accounting firms and their small business clients.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Nevada is right about the harmful effects this legislation could have on not only the small accounting firms in this country, but also the small business clients of those companies. This amendment says to the State regulators to look very carefully at the effects this legislation could have for smaller and medium-sized firms, and also on small businesses that may rely on larger firms for their audit work.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, as a businessman, I have been deeply concerned about the reports of fraudulent and even criminal behavior at prominent American corporations. When I worked in business on a daily basis, this is not the kind of behavior I saw or expected from my peers. It is imperative that we respond to the corporate malfeasance which has been rolling our markets.

The impact of these acts, all for the sake of boosting short-term profits, has been broad, costing many their jobs and others their savings.

The free market is the underpinning of our economic system, the key to the growth and development of our nation in the last two centuries. The many creative and dynamic businesses which make up our democratic capitalism make important contributions in the form of good paying jobs and the taxes which pay for critical services, such as our national defense. Above all, these businesses are good citizens in their communities. As a result, businessmen are important and highly valued people in our society. The vast majority of businessmen act in good faith and with integrity, but the bad apples give the rest a bad name.

Our system has been abused. Unfortunately, those who have raped the system have reaped financial gain, while the rest have lost jobs, savings and pensions. They and their boards violated the public trust.

Those who are lucky enough to be in positions of leadership have an enormous responsibility to enhance and not damage our economy. Unfortunately, the current system of regulation has not been sufficient to prevent bad actors from abusing their positions. That is why we are taking action today. We must build more accountability into our economy because the bad actors—even if they are not in great numbers—have impacted our whole economy. The stock market is no longer the playground of the rich: We are now in an era when as many as 50 percent of the American people have some of their assets in the market. The financial repercussions if companies are misrepresenting their financial positions are enormous.

I agree with the President that ethical behavior and corporate responsibility are essential if we are to restore the confidence of the American people in our free markets. However, the colossal corporate wrongdoing we have seen uncovered—in 2001 alone, 270 public companies had to restate the numbers in their financial statements—require us to take the initiative and address some of the structural problems that have allowed these frauds to occur.

That is why I support S. 2673, the Public Accounting and Corporate Reform Investor Protection Act of 2002. There are those who have said this legislation is too strong. I disagree. This legislation will not have a negative impact on doing their jobs as they should. We have an obligation to protect investors, employees, citizens. We are saying to CEOs, their fellow executives, and their boards: We expect you to do your jobs correctly, with integrity. And if you don’t, you will be held accountable.

It is not enough to challenge corporate America to do better. We must make clear that there is a cost to engaging in accounting and securities fraud. That is why I supported the Leahy amendment, a version of the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act. This amendment strengthens existing criminal penalties for corporate crime, creates a securities fraud felony punishable by up to 10 years in prison, and creates a new crime for schemes to defraud shareholders. The amendment also would establish a new felony antishredding provision and would protect corporate whistleblowers.

The purpose of the Sarbanes bill is not in the penalties alone. The bill addresses conflicts of interest which have permitted these crimes to occur and is a balanced approach which will help prevent corporate fraud from occurring in the future.

The bill sets up a strong, independent, and full-time oversight board with broad authorities to regulate auditors of public companies, set auditing standards, and investigate violations of accounting practices. The Public Accounting Oversight Board proposed in the bill is a better alternative to the part-time board currently being pushed by the SEC. That board would leave standard setting to the accounting profession and would most likely perpetuate the status quo. It is the lack of clear standards coming from the current system of self-regulation which has been the root of many of the frauds being revealed today.

The Sarbanes bill also restricts the nonaudit services a public accounting firm may provide to its clients that are public companies. These consulting services are clear conflicts of interest for independent auditors. We cannot rely on our own watchdogs of publicly traded companies if they are deeply invested in these same companies. If we cannot rely on the auditors, than how are we to rely on the markets?

Finally, the Sarbanes bill addresses the problem of stock analyst conflicts of interest. The Merrill Lynch case recently settled in New York is an egregious example of stock analysts pushing stocks that they actually thought had little value. Most often the motive is to boost their own investment banking departments which are writing these stocks. The bill before us today addresses this problem and requires the SEC to adopt rules designed to protect the independence and integrity of securities analysts.

I have no illusions that one bill will be the panacea for all that currently ails corporate America. For example, I believe there is more we should do, beyond the corporate disclosures in this bill, to address problems with corporate boards. We have a responsibility, however, to restore confidence in our markets and in the solid businesses which make up these markets so the economy and only decisive action can prevent this fraud on the American people from happening again.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, over the past year as Americans have worked hard to restart our economy, we have been hit by report after report of irregularities, misconduct, and blameworthy actions of corporate executives, auditors, and brokerage firms.

The current corporate and auditing scandals are hurting American families. Thousands of jobs and retirement savings have disappeared. Millions of current investors have watched their gains evaporate. Our economic recovery looks more distant. And most importantly for our long-term prosperity, investors are no longer confident that the financial information provided by public companies and their auditors is accurate.

Congress cannot restore the jobs and retirement savings caused by this wave of corporate and auditing scandals. It can act to strengthen oversight of the accounting industry, to demand greater responsibility from corporate executives, and to address conflicts of interest in brokerage firms.

Today I am voting for reform. We need to send a strong message to working and retired Americans, to investors, and to the executives and auditors publicly held that this Senate will act to restore accountability and faith in our free market system. The Senate’s bipartisan accounting reform bill will do just that.

First, the bill limits its scope to publicly held companies. The bill does not attempt to federalize accounting oversight. Instead, it starts with the Federal Government’s historic role of regulating publicly traded companies and their auditors. The State boards of accountability will continue their important role of regulating accountants who audit private companies.

Second, the legislation establishes a strong, independent Public Company Accounting Oversight Board. The board is empowered to set auditing, quality control, and ethics standards, to inspect registered accounting firms, to conduct investigations, and to take disciplinary action. The board’s power, its decisions are subject to oversight and review by the Securities and Exchange Commission, SEC.
Third, this bill seeks to ensure that auditors are fulfilling their public duties by ending potential conflicts of interest. Large accounting firms typically provide both audit and nonaudit services to their public company clients. The legislation would prohibit auditors from performing specific non-auditing services, unless those services are approved on a case-by-case basis by the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board. All legal nonaudit services would need to be approved by a public company committee.

Fourth, the Senate legislation demands that corporate leaders take greater responsibility. The bill requires that chief executive officers, CEOs, and chief financial officers, CFOs, certify financial reports, outlaws fraud and deception by managers in the auditing process, prevents CEOs and CFOs from benefiting from misstatements made in their financial reports, and prohibits corporate decisionmakers from selling company stock at a time when their employees are prohibited from doing so.

Fifth, the Senate bill would limit the growing pressure and conflicts of interest that affect the independence of stock analysts. It requires that analysts must be independent. We need to know that a company’s financial reports are accurate, so should investors expect objective opinions from stock analysts.

Finally, the bill would authorize additional funding for the SEC and would establish independent sources of funding for the new oversight board and FASB. As a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, I will support full funding for the SEC. We need to work to prevent future scandals. We also need stronger criminal laws and penalties to address fraud and abuse by corporate executives and auditors. During last week’s debate I voted for three amendments, including an amendment by Senator Lugar, that would close gaps in current law.

I know some of my constituents in the accounting and business communities are concerned by a few of the steps in the Senate bill. As I talk to certified public accountants in my State, they have emphasized that it is critical to encourage greater competition in the public accounting field. I agree investors would be better served by more competition. The bill requires the Comptroller General, in consultation with agencies and organizations, to identify the factors that have led to the consolidation of public accounting firms since 1989, the impact of consolidation, and ways to address it. While a study does not guarantee action, I look forward to reviewing its findings.

It is time to restore confidence in corporate financial statements. It is time to hold people accountable who violate the public trust. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation.

Mrs. BOXER. Individual investors, saving for their retirement or their children’s education, count on business leaders to play by the rules. They also count on financial industry professionals including accountants and research analysis to produce reliable, professional, and honest work.

But Wall Street scandals at Enron, Tyco, Merrill Lynch, WorldCom and others are proving that without strong government oversight and regulation, greed will lead executives, accountants, and investment analysts to abuse the trust that American workers and investors have placed in them.

We have to restore that trust. This bill is a good first step. It has the necessary teeth to clamp down on corporate irresponsibility. First, it creates a full-time independent board to set ethical auditing standards. Second, it prevents companies from providing most consulting services for the very same companies that they audit. Third, if enforced, it would send corporate executives who mislead shareholders to jail. And finally, it protects whistleblowers who report unethical acts by the companies for which they work.

I support this bill and would have supported even stronger legislation. I remain concerned that the public members of the board created in this bill are not chosen according to specific independence standards. I am also concerned that disclosure requirements do not include the holdings of family members of influential research analysts. I hope that any conflicts of interest that they or their financial institution might have in the investment recommendations that they make. And finally, it protects whistleblowers who report unethical acts by the companies for which they work.

Unfortunately, the House recently passed a bill that is weak and will not get the job done. It fails to establish a full-time board to design and enforce auditing standards, does not mandate jail time for securities fraud, and fails to protect whistleblowers. On the conflicts of interests that investment analysts are forced to disclose in the Senate bill, the House bill calls only for a study of the issue.

I urge the President to go beyond rhetoric and endorse the Senate accounting reform bill so that we can get a strong bill out of conference. I also urge the President to join us in fighting for meaningful pension reform to ensure that American’s retirement savings are protected. I urge our President to support proposals that raise pension funding and protect American workers and their families.

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to take a few moments to praise the Banking Committee for bringing the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002 to the floor and all the hard work they have done in the past week. In the weeks before this bill came to the floor I thought that what we needed was some type of Investors’ Bill of Rights. I had worked with colleagues on both sides of the aisle to come up with bipartisan goals to prevent corporate abuse and protect investors. I feel that the bill fills those goals.

But the line-by-line debate in conference with various agencies and organizations, the Comptroller General, in consultation with agencies and organizations, to identify the factors that have led to the consolidation of public accounting firms since 1989, the impact of consolidation, and ways to address it. While a study does not guarantee action, I look forward to reviewing its findings.

I had worked with colleagues on both sides of the aisle to come up with bipartisan goals to prevent corporate abuse and protect investors. I feel that the bill fills these goals. I feel that there are a few things that investors should see happen when we pass this bill. I believe that much of this bill will help, and in other areas we may have to work further.

I believe that investors should be able to trust the auditors. Investors rely on strong, fair and transparent audit procedures and the concept of the Oversight Board in the Sarbanes bill is a sound one.

I believe investors should be able to trust corporate CEOs. Unlike shareholders or even directors, corporate officers work full-time to promote and protect the well-being of the firm. A CEO bears responsibility for informing the firm’s shareholders of its financial health. I support the concept of withholding CEO bonuses and other incentive-based forms of compensation in cases of illegal and unethical accounting. Further, I do believe that CEOs must vouch for the veracity of public disclosures including financial statements.

These losses occurred because false profits were inflated and corporate books were doctored. Under the PERS system, an 8 percent rate of return is guaranteed for the 290,000 Oregon active and retired members of PERS. Oregon taxpayers have been required to make up the difference in the advent of an ENRON debacle or WorldCom scandal, and my State’s budget is not prepared for this kind of loss.

While this bill goes far in creating accountability, I am interested in finding out if there is more we can do and am asking the General Accounting Office, in consultation with the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Department of Labor, to report to Congress on the extent to which Federal securities laws have led to declines in the value of stock in publicly traded companies and in public and private pension plans.

I believe this study is necessary because many public and private pension plans depend on the continued stock growth in publicly traded companies, much like the PERS system. I hope this study will provide the needed information so public and private pension plans can reevaluate future investment in publicly traded companies.

We cannot stand by and watch our hard working Americans ruin their pension systems while corrupt corporate executives take advantage of investors. I am proud of the work the Senate has done in the last week in creating accountability and responsibility in corporate America and look forward to working on this issue in a way that will help the investors and pensioners in the PERS system in Oregon.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise today to express my support for the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002. I thank Chairman Sarbanes for his leadership, my colleagues on the Banking Committee, and the staff for their efforts which have resulted in a measure which is fair, realistic, and protects investors. The steady disclosure of accounting scandals and corporate misdeeds underscores the need for legislation to protect investors and to restore public trust in the accounting industry and financial markets. Chairman Sarbanes has been the leading voice for reform. Our Banking Committee held ten hearings and invested considerable time in these issues in February and March. These hearings produced extremely valuable information from which S. 2673 was developed.

Public confidence has been shaken by the incidences of fraud and misrepresentations revealed in the financial statements of companies. Enron, Xerox, and WorldCom are just a few examples of corporations which have misled investors with their financial statements. Since 1997, there have been almost 1,000 restatements of earnings by companies. Investors have suffered substantial financial losses and are unsure of the validity of the audits of public companies. There is a lingering fear that there will be additional revelations of corporate fraud or misrepresentations. This has already harmed investor confidence and could continue to have an adverse impact on the financial markets.

I support this bill because it takes the appropriate steps to help restore public trust in the accounting industry and financial markets. S. 2673 would create an independent Public Accounting Oversight Board to provide effective oversight over those in the accounting industry responsible for auditing public companies. Previous attempts at regulation have been complex and ineffective. As the numerous auditing failures demonstrate, there is a need for an independent Board with authority to adopt and enforce auditing, quality control, ethics, and independence standards for auditors.

The legislation also requires additional corporate governance procedures to make Chief Executive Officers and Chief Financial Officers more directly responsible for the quality of financial reporting made to investors. After the numerous misstatements and corporate abuses that have occurred, this is a necessary step to ensure that corporate executives are held accountable for the financial statements of their companies. A particularly important provision in the bill would require that CEOs and CFOs forfeit bonuses, incentive-based compensation, and profits from stock sales if accounting restatements result from material noncompliance with SEC financial reporting requirements.

Rules to limit and disclose conflicts of interests for stock analysts are included in the legislation. There is a concern that firms pressure their analysts to provide favorable reports on current or potential investment banking clients. This provision would provide investors with the information needed to make investment decisions. These provisions are important for investors who often depend on analysts for making investment decisions without being aware of the potential conflicts of interest that the analysts may have with companies whose stock they evaluate.

The Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act also authorizes additional appropriations for the Securities and Exchange Commission in order to provide the resources needed by investors. According to the General Accounting Office, approximately 250 positions were vacant last year because the Commission was unable to attract qualified candidates. Additional funding is needed to attract and retain qualified employees. S. 2673 would authorize appropriations of $776 million for the Commission, which is much greater than President Bush’s original budget request of $467 million. I am pleased that the President is moving closer to supporting the dollar amount included in the bill.

I also want to thank Chairman Sarbanes for including an amendment in the bill which I have worked closely with the Committee staff in developing. The amendment would require the General Accounting Office, GAO, to conduct a study of the factors that have led to consolidation in the accounting industry and the impact that this consolidation has had on quality of audit services, audit costs, auditor independence, or other problems for businesses. In addition, the study is necessary to determine what can be done to increase competition among accounting firms and whether federal or state regulations impede competition.

I am pleased that the Senate has worked in a strong bipartisan fashion to strengthen this bill. Extremely valuable amendments have been added to this bill. In particular, the Leahy and Biden amendments strengthen penalties for corporate fraud. These two amendments will help provide much needed additional protection for investors and retirement plan participants.

I encourage my colleagues to support the Public Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002 to restore public trust in the accounting industry and the financial markets.
They should not enter into any appearance of conflict, such as the conflict that occurs when the corporation that they serve extends them a personal loan.

When an individual investor chooses to buy stock, he or she does so with the full knowledge that it might turn out to be a bad investment. The stock may appreciate in value, but it might also go sour.

Anyone who makes that investment knows that the only way to be sure not to lose any money is to keep the money in cash or buy a T-bill.

But that is not the way it worked for the CEOs and directors of some of the largest public companies in this country.

For example, Bernard Ebbers, the former CEO of WorldCom, took out $430 million in loans from his company between September 2000 and the end of 2001.

When the SEC began investigating WorldCom earlier this year, $343 million in loans were still outstanding, most of which may never be recovered by WorldCom’s investors.

Those loans to Ebbers are far from unique in corporate America today. One of the most egregious examples of this type of abuse recent months is the disclosure of $3.1 billion in loans extended to family members and affiliated business interests of the Rigas family by Adelphia Communications, a publicly traded company controlled by the Rigas family.

These loans were never disclosed to shareholders, and were apparently used to shore up a wide variety of business deals involving Rigas family members, including a golf course and an infusion of cash into the Buffalo Sabres hockey team.

On July 9, President Bush went to Wall Street and called for, among other things, “an end to all company loans to corporate officers.”

I believe that the President was right, and that the Leahy amendment with that goal in mind.

Investors have a right to know exactly how much of their dividends are going to pay for excessive pay packages. They also have a right to expect that the board of directors is truly independent and that no directors are tied too closely to the corporation they serve because of loans they have received.

Ms. SNOWE, Mr. President, I rise today to speak in support of the legislation we are considering, S. 2673, the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002.

Last fall, we watched as a company once in the top 10 of the Fortune 500 imploded from the weight of its own complex efforts to mask debt and hide losses. We watched as the company stock-laden retirement plans of Enron’s locked employees dwindled by $1 billion. Meanwhile, company executives cashed out their own shares while these employees were barred from doing so. And finally, in congressional hearings, we watched and listened as former Enron executives either chose to remain silent, or pointed fingers of blame at everyone’s actions except their own.

Tragically, the bankruptcy of Enron was not an isolated occurrence in the business sector. Rather, it was only the beginning. It ultimately proved to be a watershed event, as several other companies have reevaluated their own business and accounting methods, and found significant internal weaknesses. For example, the telecommunications company, being investigated by the SEC and FBI in regard to questionable accounting practices used to artificially inflate revenue. Adelphia Communications, a cable company, is now in bankruptcy proceedings due to investigations by the SEC and two federal grand juries for off-balance sheet loans to the company’s founders.

More recently, Xerox announced that it would restate 5 years of results which could change the nature of what had been reported as $6 billion in revenues. And on June 25, WorldCom announced that it had misrepresented $3.8 billion in expenses over five quarters, therefore allowing the company to report financial gain, when in reality, the company was experiencing a net loss.

While the downward spiral of each of these companies was unique, common threads are woven through each of their failures. First, the insistence by executives that, above all else, stock price remain high was an integral part of the creation of the financial woes of each company; in essence, this short-term focus compromised the long-term viability of these entities.

What has also been disturbing as these revelations have come to light is the role played by the so-called independent auditors of the companies under investigation. While the accountants are not the primary perpetrators of the financial deception that has occurred, the apparent lack of scrutiny of the financial statements of the aforementioned companies has created an inherent mistrust in the accuracy and integrity of the true nature of corporate earnings.

Furthermore, the practice of allowing auditing companies to perform non-audit services can have the ultimate effect of allowing such companies to audit their own personnel. This practice defeats the purpose of having an unbiased entity objectively reviewing the merits and accuracy of financial statements.

The legislation we are considering in the Senate includes crucial provisions that will play a pivotal role in restoring confidence in our market system, and enhancing the public and private sector controls that are in place to monitor the relevant entities. The legislation, a Public Accounting Oversight Board, which will be an entity solely focused on companies that audit and account for publicly traded firms. This oversight authority will include the ability to investigate and punish any wrongdoing by companies under SEC jurisdiction as well as their auditors. The bill also disallows simultaneous auditing and consulting, while providing for the Board to approve certain exceptions to non-specific non-audit services under certain circumstances.

The pending legislation also makes important strides in ensuring that any gain made by company executives be subject to retrieval if the company has been determined an accounting record due to certain noncompliance with SEC regulations. As Treasury Secretary Paul O’Neill so aptly states in response to the actions of Enron executives, “I really do believe that the CEO is in effect the CEO of all the people who work in their organization. And that with that responsibility goes a commitment that the people come first and the practices are open and above board and without reproach.” These ex-ecutives should not be able to leave their beleaguered companies, pockets stuffed with profits from cashed out stock options, while investors and employees suffer the consequences of questionable company practices.

With the unanimous passage of the Leahy amendment, the Senate recognized the need to strengthen penalties for the punishment of those involved in corporate crime. For example, the amendment created a new felony for persons involved in the destruction of evidence—address in the future such indiscretions as the document shredding perpetrated by Arthur Andersen’s Enron Audit team. In addition, the Leahy amendment grants important whistleblower protections to company employees—like Enron’s Sherron Watkins—who bravely report wrongdoing occurring within their own corporation.

The bottom line is that integrity and trust are at the core of a successfully functioning market system. These recent business scandals have severely damaged this foundation. And as with any foundation in disrepair, leaving undressed the damage caused by lost faith in the system will lead to continued instability, or worse.

Therefore, we in Congress have an obligation to do what we can to maintain and build investor confidence and faith in our free market system. I believe that the legislation we are considering today is a crucial first step toward that end, as well as ensuring the full re-bound of our floundering economy.
and, in some cases, their own auditors. WorldCom, Enron, Tyco, Global Crossing, Xerox—the list goes on and on.

Much attention has been focused on the huge sums that CEOs and other senior executives have extracted from these companies in the form of incentive pay, but even those large sums pale in comparison to the total shareholder value that has been destroyed as a result of these disclosures. At its peak, WorldCom’s market capitalization exceeded $180 billion, making it, for a while, the most valuable telecommunications services company in the world. Now, WorldCom shares are effectively worthless.

Despite a slowdown in the telecom industry, some of the value of those shares might have been preserved had its executives relied on sound management, instead of deceptive accounting, to make their numbers.

Who will suffer most from the immense value decline associated with WorldCom? As my colleague from California, CalPERS, the pension fund set up to invest the retirement savings of 1.3 million public employees in my home state, has estimated that it suffered a $580 million loss on WorldCom stocks and bonds. That means that the average California public employee lost over $440, not including any investments in WorldCom they may have held independently.

To give you some perspective on that amount of money lost by California public employees due to the WorldCom fraud alone is likely to exceed the entire sum of the tax rebate checks they received as part of the President’s tax cut last year.

In fact, every American who invests in our stock markets will suffer as a result of these scandals, because every scandal further tarnishes the reputation of American corporate honesty for investors around the world. In recent months, those investors have pulled billions of dollars out of investments out of our country, further reducing the value of stocks and weakening the dollar.

The only way that we can turn this culture around is by fostering a corporate environment that rewards honest management, and severely punishes fraudulent activities. That is exactly what would be achieved by the bill proposed by Senator SARBANES.

The Sarbanes bill tackles many of the above problem areas associated with recent corporate scandals. Most importantly, the bill would make it much more difficult for public companies to bypass or trample over auditors in attempt to produce inaccurate or deceptive financial statements.

For the first time, the Sarbanes bill creates a truly independent accounting oversight board, staffed with objective, well-qualified experts to enforce rules and prosecute violators without having to vet their decisions elsewhere. Unlike the Public Oversight Board, which depended on fees from the very auditors it was meant to regulate, this new board will be funded by mandatory fees from all companies. These are fees that cannot be withheld at the whim of those who have the greatest interest in undermining the work of the board.

The Sarbanes bill does not stop at the creation of this new board, however. Rather, the bill strengthens areas of the law that have proven inadequate to prevent the fraudulent corporate behavior that has become so prevalent today.

The Sarbanes bill prevents auditors from controlling the entire financial reporting system at an individual company by both designing the internal audit system, and then purporting to offer an unbiased external audit. The Sarbanes bill will require the resolve and oversight of board of director audit committees by requiring, among other provisions, that all committee members be independent and that they be given free reign to question auditors without executive officers present.

But rather than rely solely on increased oversight, the bill moves to reduce conflicts of interest at their source, by requiring the CEO and CFO of a company that has had to restate its financial accounts to disgorge any bonuses or other incentive pay they received in the year prior to the misstatement.

Moreover, under an amendment sponsored by Senator SCHUMER and myself, all executive officers are now prohibited, sharply limiting the types of “hidden” compensation that can be offered to executives without being fully disclosed to shareholders. Our amendment passed by a voice vote and will go a long way toward preventing the types of loan-related abuses prevalent at WorldCom, Global Crossing, and other companies now under investigation by the SEC for loan-related abuses.

When Senator SARBANES drafted this bill, he focused on the single reform that matters most: increased transparency. Unfortunately, we may witness more corporate failures like those of Enron or WorldCom. These are failures that are brought on by over-investment, too much debt, or an ill-conceived belief in markets or services that never live up to expectations.

What we cannot abide by, and what the Sarbanes bill goes a long way toward preventing, is the will of senior executives to hide those bad decisions in misleading financial statements. By ensuring true auditor oversight, creating meaningful penalties for senior executives who defraud investors, and putting in place new disclosure requirements, this bill will dramatically increase the quality and timeliness of the information available to individual investors.

The United States is blessed with the best-regulated markets in the world, and for that we have been rewarded with tremendous foreign investment and a leadership position in world financial markets.

A vote in favor of this legislation is a vote to strengthen our position and avoid a wholesale loss of investor confidence that would be perilously difficult to restore.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I wish today to express my support for S. 2673, the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002. I am pleased that the Senate is acting decisively to impose harsh, swift punishment on those corporate executives who exploit the trust of their shareholders and employees while enriching themselves. The recent corporate scandals demonstrate just how important it is to hold corporate executives accountable. I believe it is important to be provided with the tools necessary to aid in the investigation of these forms of fraud.

During this debate, our colleagues on both sides have called for increased penalties for corporate fraud offenses. This week, as the Dow Jones index plummeted nearly 300 points—representing the biggest single day point drop since the week following the attacks of September 11 we voted unanimously to adopt a series of amendments that will strengthen criminal fraud penalties and create new criminal fraud offenses. I cosponsored an amendment with Senator BIDEN to enhance white collar penalties, and I supported an amendment offered by Senator LOTT, which incorporated the President’s proposal by enhancing white collar penalties, supplementing existing criminal laws, and increasing the Security and Exchange Commission’s administrative powers to enforce this nation’s securities laws. I also supported Senator LEAHY’s amendment, a measure I worked to improve in committee. This amendment includes new criminal and civil provisions that I believe will also assist in deterring and punishing future corporate wrongdoing.

Further, I am glad to see the Senate finally considering legislation that will overhaul government regulation of the accounting industry. I agree with my distinguished colleague from Maryland that there is an inherent conflict of interest between internal and external auditing. The same people should not be installing the internal control system, performing the internal audits, and reviewing the financial statements. The external auditor sometimes has to be tough as nails, and willing to disagree with its client’s top executives. It is hard to be the bad cop when you are also the personal trainer.

However, Congress cannot always second-guess the desires of investors. In some cases, stockholders, bondholders, and other stakeholders will be worse off if Congress imposes too strict a barrier between consulting and auditing. This is especially true for small businesses that may not be able to afford to hire both a consulting firm and a separate accounting firm. And, as the President has noted, in our fast-changing economy, Congressionally-imposed barriers between different business practices can end up becoming Congressionally-imposed barriers to productivity growth.

I think the bill before us represents an effort to strike a good balance between these two competing goals of auditor independence and business inovation. It prevents internal and external audit work from being done by the same firm, it establishes clear lines of responsibility and accountability. At the same time, the corporation’s independent audit committee will be permitted to authorize certain consulting services if they are convincing it is in the shareholders’ best interest.

To build this committee, consisting of members of the client’s board of directors, will be required by law to be completely independent of the corporation itself. This will mean that if the CEO and other top corporate officials in the company’s best interests to have their accounting firm help with, for example, tax consulting and preparation, the corporate officials will have to argue the merits of their case before the independent audit committee. That kind of independence makes good sense, and it makes good law.

The Federal Government needs to help investors whether banks, pension funds, or individual investors in their quest for information about the financial condition of America’s businesses. Doing so is crucial for our economic long-term health. While Enron’s and WorldCom’s financial she-nanigans contain many differences, the similarities are far more important. These were both firms that borrowed too much money during the expansion years of the late 1990s. And when it started getting tough to make the debt payments, both firms tried to hide their financial difficulties through mis-representative bookkeeping, cooked up at company headquarters. They succeeded for a time, but the combination of investor vigilance, media investigations, and government scrutiny are eventually bringing the facts to light.

If there are clear real financial transparency, both current stockholders and potential investors could pierce the veil of bookkeeping to immediately see these companies’ true financial situation. This may not have prevented the pain of layoffs and tragic loss of retirement assets by thousands of employees. However, with more accurate and timely information, investors, directors, analysts, financial institutions, and others could have intervened earlier and helped to restructure these firms before all-out catastrophe threat-tened. When it comes to business information, knowing sooner is always better than knowing later.

And even more importantly, if corporate officials had faced the threat of serious jail time and the certain knowledge that their financial and accounting capers would be exposed to the light, much would have resulted in less likely to have overborrowed and underdisclosed in the first place. Mr. President, the bill on which we will vote today, on which Senator Sar-banes and many of our colleagues have investment capital, container-aid provisions that I believe will put real fear of serious consequences into the minds of corporate wrongdoers.

Does this bill represent a perfect solution to the corporate accountability issues presently facing our country? Of course not. I would have written a different bill in several respects. However, I believe that the bill is a good attempt to balance competing interests and different realities. As the bill goes to conference with a House-passed bill that has some significant differences, I expect the balance to improve even further.

Strengthening corporate accountability is crucial to our nation’s long-term welfare. If Congress and the President can act together to help increase corporate transparency and restore investor confidence, then businesses will be better able to raise investment capital. Greater access to capital will enable U.S. businesses to fund the groundbreaking research and to purchase the high-tech equipment that is the foundation of America’s long-term prosperity. And Americans from all walks of life will reap the rewards.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I rise today as a proud cosponsor of amendment No. 4283 that is being offered by Senator Levin. This amendment says that the standard-setting body for accounting principles that is set up in this bill shall review the accounting treatment of employee stock options and shall within a year of enactment of this act adopt an appropriately generally accepted accounting principle for the treatment of employee stock options.

Unfortunately, this body is not going to get the opportunity to vote on this amendment because the reform I proposed last week requiring the expensing of stock options. We want to help restore investors’ confidence for the long run, but we are being denied an opportunity to do this. A simple vote on this amendment has been denied, and that is truly regrettable. I see no reason that a vote should not be permitted on this amendment, but let’s face it—the fix is in.

I want to talk more about the expending of stock options.

Americans have heard from the President and practically every Member of the Senate about the vital need to restore trust and transparency in business practices so we can begin to repair investors’ faith in the honesty of our companies and in our markets. We need more transparency on a company’s books so that any person wanting to invest their hard-earned money has a true financial picture of the company they are planning to invest in.

This issue of expensing stock options is not going to go away. Look at what has just happened. Coca-Cola, a Fortune 500 company, said that it will begin in the fourth quarter to treat all employee stock options as an expense. And I believe more companies will follow Coca-Cola’s lead. It is only a matter of time.

Before I yield the floor, I would like to read a quote from a July 22, 2002 Weekly Standard article, “Big Business’ Bad Behavior,” in which economist Irwin Stelzer, Director of Reguulatory Studies at the Hudson Institute, eloquently explains why governmental action is needed to rein in our financial institutions. The “opposition of important segments of the business and accounting communities to reform,” he writes, “means that government must take on the burden of revising the institutional framework within which business operates—setting the rules of the game that will allow markets to do their job of allocating human and financial capital to its highest and best uses. As Milton Friedman said, the fans of free markets have written, society needs rules and an emprise ‘to enforce compliance with rules on the part of those few who would otherwise not play the game.’” I couldn’t agree more.

I ask unanimous consent that the following articles be printed in the RE-CORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RE-CORD, as follows:

BIG BUSINESS’S BAD BEHAVIOR

(By Irwin M. Stelzer)

No sensible person can disagree with what the president told the Wall Street biggies he addressed last week. Crooks should be forced to disgorge their ill-gotten gains, and should go to a jail for extended periods. Enforcement agencies should be given adequate resources. Corporate executives should be held responsible for the accuracy of what they tell shareholders, discretionary disclosure in annual reports “prominently and in plain English,” and explain what their “compensation package is in the best interest of the company.” Board members should be independent and “ask tough questions.” Shareholders should speak up. Most important, chief executive officers should create a “false tone” that ensure the company’s top managers behave in accordance with the highest ethical standards.

The quarrel comes not with what the president said, but with what he didn’t say. In the game of matching his laundry list of reforms against the inevitably longer list generated by the Daschie-Leahy-Sarbanes-Gephardt crash the president’s proposal last week’s unanimous vote of Senate Republicsounds better if you’re just compiling a laundry list of items aimed at punishing politically unpopular corporate bad guys. Only if there is a conceptual framework within which to place the options can it be created. The latter was one of the strengths of the proposals, that honesty matters, that market and accurate profit reporting are in their interest. Just as gamblers won’t put their bets down when they know the house is cheating, so investors won’t put their money into shares if prices can be manipulated by inflated profit reporting or special treatment of insiders.

Hence we have a stream of quite sensible reforms proposed by the Business Roundtable and the New York Stock Exchange, some going beyond those being pushed by the president of the United States, that such a management team must be supported in its efforts to implement such reforms. The question becomes whether the options are in their interest. Just as gamblers won’t put their bets down when they know the house is cheating, so investors won’t put their money into shares if prices can be manipulated by inflated profit reporting or special treatment of insiders.

committee that banking is not a consideration in the compensation of analysts of a full-service firm.” Forget the double negative: Grubman was conceding that part of his salary—$2 million in the form of stock options—came from the $160 million in underwriting fees that his firm received from WorldCom over the past four years.

Again, get the incentives right. One way, now preferred on Wall Street, is to write contracts that make analysts’ compensation independent of the fees flowing into the investment banking divisions of the large firms. But just how analysts can prosper if the banking division isn’t earning enough to pay for them? Besides, underwriters suddenly will want to issue “sell” recommendations just when their investment banking partners are pitching for business, this proposed reform is unlikely to be effective, especially after the current heat is off and congressional attention turns to other matters. True or not, bankers believe that CEOs, being human (yes, most are), are likely to take into account what a firm’s analysts are saying about his stock when selecting an investment banker. It would be an unusual CEO, indeed, who would cheerfully receive an investment banker after reading in the morning paper that the firm’s analysts had just downgraded his company’s stock from a “buy” to a “sell.” Many investment bankers—many—will have to persuade their partner-analysts to be team players. Banking fees are large enough to give them an enormous incentive to do just that.

So, let’s get the incentives right and mandate a separation of the investment banking and stock-picking businesses, another McCain proposal. Analysts would then have an unambiguous incentive to make the best “buy” and “sell” recommendations they possibly can, so as to build reputations that will attract investors to them. And investors, rather than getting something in return for their commissions—dollars—honest advice from men and women expert in the analysis of corporate financial data, competing with one another to attract clients by creating a track record of picking winners. With power to Directors. Again, we have a case of skewed incentives. Directors are hired by managers to protect shareholders from, er, those same managers. To make matters worse, executives often shower them with perks and consulting fees, the continuation of which depend on the goodwill of the CEOs they are supposed to be supervising. It is the rare director who can persuade his partner-analyst to be team players. Banking fees are large enough to give them an enormous incentive to do just that.

But nowadays there aren’t many people who want to be like Mike, so it is incumbent on policymakers to get managers’ incentives right. President Bush’s proposal for publication of compensation arrangements in an accessible format would be a step in the right direction, its effectiveness attested to by the howls of outrage it produced from some CEOs. Truly independent boards, created along the lines described above, would be another advance, since compensation committees are more likely to relate pay to performance than the supine committees that now exist on some boards. Add in the requirement that options be treated as profit-reducing expenses—another McCain proposal that so horrified senators that it has for now been derailed—and you will have a new parsimony that would tend to demuslimate with effort and performance. Under such a regime, executives would have a clear incentive to spend their time creating efficiencies and new markets instead of figuring out how to cash in options, and how to persuade their boards to revalue options if poor company performance has driven the stock price below the price at which the options may be exercised, rewarding executives whether or not they have delivered long-term value for shareholders.

This might sound like an awful lot of regulation. But it is of a special, self-liquidating sort. If we adopt policies that get the incentive right, companies will emerge of their own accord, and we can then get out of the way so that the various actors can do their thing—audit, advise on investments, monitor management performance in the interests of owners, and manage the company for the world in which managers’ interests coincide with those of shareholders. The right kind of regulation can be a model of minimal—and effective—government.

MOVING TO SPUR OTHERS TO FOLLOW AND COULD SHAPE CURRENT TALKS IN SENATE

Mr. Daft convened a meeting at 7 a.m. Thursday in Sun Valley, Idaho, where he and several other directors will attend a conference. The discussion, over breakfast in the condominium of director Herbert Allen, was short. It wasn’t hard to win the directors’ support; Mr. Buffett, in particular, applauded the move. "Our management's determination to change to the preferred method of accounting for employee stock options means that our earnings will more clearly reflect economic reality when all compensation costs are recorded in the financial statements."

"We’re in a new environment," Gary Fayard, Coke’s chief financial officer, said in an interview. "There had been a loophole in the accounting code that let people say they will try again before final passage of the underlying accounting bill, expected late today or early tomorrow.

"There’s no doubt that stock options are compensation," he added. "If they weren’t, no one would be giving them away."

Coke said its decision, announced yesterday morning, will reduce earnings only about a penny a share—for 2002. That reflects the fact that Coke doesn’t grant options as extensively as do some other companies. And while Coke isn’t the first in the field with recent disclosures of accounting changes—Boeing Co. and Winn-Dixie Stores Inc. in recent years began calculating stock options as an expense—it’s high profile could spark more interest among companies to consider calls from investors, regulators and politicians for greater financial candor.

AMR Corp., a San Francisco-based operator of commercial airlines, also said it would record stock options as an expense.

Supporters of expensing say options are compensation and should be treated as such, especially since generous option awards dilute the value of shares outstanding. Opponents say options are perks and argue that expensing would confuse investors, not enlighten them. Changing accounting rules would reduce earnings at some companies.

Supporters of expensing say options are compensation and should be treated as such, especially since generous option awards dilute the value of shares outstanding. Opponents say options are perks and argue that expensing would confuse investors, not enlighten them. Changing accounting rules would reduce earnings at some companies.

In 1993, the Financial Accounting Standards Board tried to mandate the expensing of options, but retreated under pressure from some CEOs. Truly independent boards, created along the lines described above, would be another advance, since compensation committees are more likely to relate pay to performance than the supine committees that now exist on some boards. Add in the requirement that options be treated as profit-reducing expenses—another McCain proposal that so horrified senators that it has for now been derailed—and you will have a new parsimony that would tend to demuslinize with effort and performance. Under such a regime, executives would have a clear incentive to spend their time creating efficiencies and new markets instead of figuring out how to cash in options, and how to persuade their boards to revalue options if poor company performance has driven the stock price below the price at which the options may be exercised, rewarding executives whether or not they have delivered long-term value for shareholders.

This might sound like an awful lot of regulation. But it is of a special, self-liquidating sort. If we adopt policies that get the incentive right, companies will emerge of their own accord, and we can then get out of the way so that the various actors can do their thing—audit, advise on investments, monitor management performance in the interests of owners, and manage the company for the world in which managers’ interests coincide with those of shareholders. The right kind of regulation can be a model of minimal—and effective—government.

About 8,200 of Coke's options on one million shares for Mr. Daft. However, it is not clear how other companies will follow Coke. About 200 of Coke's 39,000 employees received options during 2001.

Mr. Buffett predicted Mr. Daft's move could make him "unpopular among other CEOs," but he also said that while business leaders had managed to quash efforts in 1993 to force expensing of stock options, the current environment could force them now to accept it.

"I'm sure a few others will do it," he said. "It may be that good practices drive out the bad."

Sen. John McCain (R., Ariz.) issued a statement applauding Coke's decision and expressing hope that "other companies will follow suit."

Judy Fischer, managing director of Executive Compensation Advisory Services, in Alexandria, Va., said she believes other corporations will follow Coke. "If a corporation can do it without problems at the bottom line, I think a lot will follow," she said.

However, it wasn't clear how other companies will react, particularly high-tech businesses that rely heavily on stock options. A spokesman for Santa Clara, Calif., semiconductor maker Intel Corp., where all employees and stock options, said he couldn't comment on Coke's move. One lobbyist was skeptical. "I doubt just because one company made this decision that other companies will follow suit," said Ralph Hellmann, top lobbyist for the Information Technology Industry Council, a high-tech trade association in Washington. "Each individual company is going to make its own determination."

Looking beyond 2001, Coke's Mr. Fayard said earnings per share will be reduced by about three cents in 2003, with the reduction gradually increasing to about nine cents a share by 2006, he said. But the change won't affect the company's cash flow, he said.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise first in support of our free market economy. The revelations over the last few months of corporate officials having betrayed the trust of their employees and their investors is simply unacceptable. Corporate officials must be prosecuted to the full extent of the law and if additional penalties are required, then we should enact them.

But let us not forget, that despite these terrible, unconscionable acts perpetrated by some CEOs on their workers and investors, the principles of our free market economy remain the envy of the world. These principles have allowed the economy to be the most productive, most innovative, most creative system, that has created income and employment only dreamed of in other parts of the world.

One of these principles is property rights. But there is a danger that some corporate managers have forgotten that the companies they run are not their personal property to operate however they see fit or for their own benefit.

So as we pursue new rules to punish those who have betrayed a trust—and we must—let us not allow the pendulum to swing so far that it jeopardizes the vitality of our economic system for the future. Rather than working against the principles that make our economic system so great, our actions should affirm these principles.

I am angry, shocked and extremely concerned about the revelations that have emerged in the past 6 months concerning the accounting practices of a number of public companies. To operate efficiently our free market system requires a high level of honesty and trustworthiness among its participants, especially among its key decision makers.

In the long run our economy—our stand of living—reflects not only our inventiveness and hard work but our moral character. Corporate executives have to be worthy of the key role they play. With all their wealth and high position comes responsibility. Sadly, some executives were not worthy of this responsibility.

Restoring the public's trust is of paramount importance. America's system of corporate governance and its trust in our financial reporting mechanisms have been shaken and restoring this trust is of critical importance. It will take more than words to restore that confidence and trust. It will take something that I, Senator Dodd and others have been lecturing on for many years, and this is something not easily legislated. It will take a renewed awareness of the ethics of responsibility.

Reaffirming the principle of "Character Counts." Reaffirming the principle of "Character Counts" means not only encouraging our young people to live by the six pillars—trustworthiness, respect, responsibility, fairness, caring, and citizenship—but expecting that our corporate leaders adhere to these traits and conduct themselves accordingly.

Cooking the books has hurt thousands and thousands of hard-working Americans. American companies must adhere to the highest standards of public accounting ethics. Despite these abuses, as I have said our economy remains strong and the vast majority of CEOs are honest and abide by the rules. Unfortunately a few bad characters have tainted the reputation of our enterprise system.

The President and the Congress are addressing reform. I will support these reform efforts that are aimed at regaining trust and confidence in our Nation's financial markets and ensure that American workers are protected from unscrupulous corporations. No violation of the public's trust can be tolerated.

But I also believe more can be done, and this bill before us moves us in that direction. I support:

Full and accurate disclosure: I endorse the SEC's proposals to require CEOs to certify that their financial statements completely and accurately reflect the true condition of the company.

Trust and accountability: Corporate leaders must be held accountable for any abuse of public trust. I believe that executives should be required to return any money they received through fraudulent accounting practices, as embodied in the Senate bill.

Independence: Boards of directors must exercise independent judgment and a substantial majority of board members must be independent of management.

Auditing reform: Strong oversight of the accounting profession is essential if we are to ensure independence of auditors and credibility of the auditing process.

Pension protection: I fully support steps that will protect the retirement savings of American workers. Workers should have freedom to diversify and monitor their own retirement funds, and confidence that their investments will not fall prey to unethical executives.

I urge the SEC to move forward with the implementation of its proposed reforms. And, I strongly believe that the NYSE and the NASDAQ must proceed to improve their listing standards. I support the reform that works to strengthen our free enterprise system. It is our obligation as a Congress and as a country to ensure that the unethical members that are causing hardship for so many hard-working Americans, be swiftly brought to justice and face jail time. We will restore faith in our economic system for it is the greatest in the world. I support passage of the Senate bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, while I support the passage of this bill, I think we ought to recognize the role the Administration is already playing to deal with these serious problems of corporate responsibility.

I pleased that President Bush announced last week his suggestions for corporate accounting reform. The President forcefully argued that higher ethical standards are an imperative to restore confidence in corporate America. Those standards should, in his words, “be enforced by strict laws and upheld by responsible business leaders” and that “corporations should not be disconnected from the values of our country.”

I also support the President’s executive order to create the Corporate Fraud Task Force. Combined with new criminal penalties for corporate fraud, this taskforce can help bring stability to our economy. The President has also asked the Securities and Exchange Commission to adopt new rules to make sure that auditors are truly independent from the businesses which they audit.

We also need to be sure the SEC has the resources it needs to carry out its other important responsibilities.

I am hopeful that the Appropriations Committee will be able to provide the necessary amount of funding for the SEC to hire the enforcement officers it needs and to acquire state-of-the-art technology that is necessary for the performance of its duties.

With the passage of this bill by the Senate, we will be able, in conference, to work with the other body to produce a good bill that deals effectively with the problems in this area of very legitimate concern to our country.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I want to compliment the majority leader for turning the Banking Committee’s issue of corporate responsibility. I also want to thank Chairman SARBANES for his leadership on the impressive bill that he has produced in the Banking Committee.

So many times all that the public hears about Congress is about turf and partisanship. This comprehensive reform effort disproves those claims. Thanks to the leadership of the Majority Leader and Senator SARBANES, the bill that we are about to vote on is a tough, comprehensive reform package that enjoys broad bipartisan support in the Senate. It brought together the best ideas from many Senators, from many Committees, and from both parties.

From my standpoint, as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, this has been an opportunity to benefit once again from the wonderful partnership that we have forged between the Banking Committee and the Judiciary Committee. After September 11, our two Committees worked together to write the anti-terrorism provisions of the USA Patriot Act that dealt with money laundering. Here, with the 97-0 vote to adopt the provisions of the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act, as a Leahy-McCain amendment to this bill, Senator SARBANES and I have again united the forces and expertise of our Committees. This time we have done so to craft comprehensive laws to deal with financial wrongdoing, and again done so with bipartisan support in both Committees. I think that the final product is better and more complete because of our joint work. Thank you Chairman SARBANES.

But the joint effort did not stop with Senator SARBANES and myself. Senators BIDEN, HATCH and the Minority Leader offered that were also adopted by the Senate, adding aspects of the President’s recent proposal. That is an impressive show of bipartisanship because those proposals were only made after the Senate had already begun debate on this bill. Despite the White House’s refusal to help us shape our more comprehensive proposal, we did not hesitate to include the President’s suggestions in our final product.

The bill was further perfected by Senator EDWARDS’ thoughtful amendment dealing with the conduct of corporate attorneys. Once again, we were able to draw on the expertise of a particular Senator to enlist the help of lawyers in stopping corporate fraud, not designing it. In short, we started with a fine bill from Senator SARBANES, and have strengthened even further, never losing our strong bipartisan support.

We need to remind ourselves of the underlying reasons for the bipartisan support behind these measures. Enron brought it to light, but it goes deeper. It’s about a basic fairness and equity that transcends party lines. It’s about rewarding people who play by the rules and punishing people who don’t. It’s about the basic American ideal of treating all people equally under the law. We cannot have a system where a pickpocket who steals $50 faces more jail time than a CEO who steals $50 million. The integrity of our financial system depends on accountability. The mounting scandals and declining stock market have damaged the integrity of our public markets and we must restore it.

I was proud that the Judiciary Committee, joined by the Majority Leader and a bipartisan group of Senators including Senator MCCAIN and others was able to make such an important contribution to this effort by contributing the provisions of S. 10, the “Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act,” as it was unanimously reported out of the Judiciary Committee in April, as an amendment to the Sarbanes-Oxley Act. After the Senate last week: It establishes a new crime of securities fraud, with a tough penalties for fraud, and protecting victims of fraud. It accomplishes this in three ways: punishing criminals who commit fraud, preserving evidence to prove fraud, and protecting victims of fraud.

Recent events have served as a stark reminder that we need to reexamine our laws to make sure that they reflect our important and shared values of honesty and accountability. Enron has become a symbol for the torrent of corporate fraud scandals that have hit the United States and banks, creating a weakened financial markets. Tyco, Xerox, WorldCom, Adelphia, Global Crossings, the list goes on.

The things that happened at Enron were worse than a few bad apples. Senior management at Enron, assisted by an army of accountants and lawyers spun an intricate web of deceit. They engaged in a systematic fraud that allowed them to secretly take hundreds of millions of dollars out of the company. This kind of fraud is not the work of a lone fraud artist. Rather, it is symptomatic of a corporate culture where greed has been inflamed and honesty devalued.

I also support the President’s suggestions in our final product. We need to reinforce the resources it needs to carry out its other important responsibilities. Here, with the 97-0 vote to adopt(6,827),(994,995)
With these bipartisan provisions and others incorporated, this bill we have produced is truly a comprehensive measure. It tightens regulation of corporate misconduct, but it now also provides an important deterrent to fraud artists. This bill is going to send wrongdoers to jail and save documents from the shredder, which sends a powerful and clear message to potential corporate wrongdoers “don’t do it.” As a former prosecutor, I have discovered that nothing focuses attention to morality than the prospect of a long prison sentence.

In the Senate, as we have been debating and shaping specific and comprehensive reform proposals, we had been trying for months unsuccessfully to get the President’s support. The Administration had stayed on the sidelines during this important debate.

For whatever reason, perhaps the mounting scandals or the declining market, the President decided last week to speak out against corporate fraud. He spoke again today on our economy. I welcome his participation and hope that he will follow up his speeches by supporting real reform. It is amazing to me that with such broad bipartisan support and now on the verge of Senate passage, that the Administration has still not given a clear statement supporting the bill on which we are now about to vote.

Although I now understand that a White House official reportedly said that they agreed with the “goals” of this reform bill, I was disappointed that the President has not yet voiced his support for this bipartisan measure about to pass the Senate. Supporting the “goals” is a good first step but it is nonetheless a baby step. I read in the paper last week that the President does not want to “tip his hand.” This is not a game of poker, however. This is the time for Presidential leadership with the interest of our markets at stake. When there are specific proposals pending the U.S. Senate by an overwhelming majority of Senators from both parties and the Speaker of the House is supporting the measures as well one wonders what it will take for the President to express his opinion.

For those of us in the Senate, like myself, Senator SARBANES, Senator McCAIN, Majority Leader DASCHLE, and others who have worked hard to come up with specific and bipartisan reform proposals, the “goals” have been clear for a long time. It is now time for comprehensive action.

While the President’s proposal was short on details, some of it did sound familiar to those of us on the Judiciary Committee. Three of the President’s proposals are found in S. 2010, the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act, which we adopted 97-0 in the Senate: One, The President advocates for strengthening the laws punishing witnesses who are not scared to help prosecutors prove what happened so one will be held accountable. It fails to provide whistleblowers with protection that will break the corporate code of silence. Remember, you can put whatever criminal laws you want on the books but unless there are witnesses who are not scared to help prosecutors prove what happened no one will be held accountable. It fails to establish a realistic statute of limitations to allow victims to recoup their losses when a fraud artist declares bankruptcy. Speaker HASTERT has now publicly supported the Sarbanes bill and the Leahy amendment. I hope that the President will support the bill’s provisions as it moves forward to conference and will appeal to other Republican House members not to water it down. That will be the true test of his resolve to restore accountability to our markets.

It is time for action, comprehensive action that will restore confidence and accountability in our public markets. The Sarbanes bill, including the unanimously approved Leahy-McCain amendment incorporating the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act, provides just such action.

Let’s pass this comprehensive bill and send the President a strong measure to sign into law. Congress must act to restore integrity in our capital markets to strengthen our economy. Mr. President, I was disappointed today by your only mentioning the “goals.” As I said, we were also quick to write up his ideas into concrete proposals and include them in our bill. Unfortunately, the President’s proposal failed to include many of the important provisions in the bipartisan Leahy amendment. It fails to create a new crime to punish securities fraud to directly punish corporate wrongdoers. It fails to provide whistleblowers with protection that will break the corporate code of silence. Remember, you can put whatever criminal laws you want on the books but unless there are witnesses who are not scared to help prosecutors prove what happened no one will be held accountable. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. We will be happy to discuss that after the UC is entered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that upon disposition of H.R. 3763, passage of S. 2673 be vitiated and the bill be returned to the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, I want to begin by very briefly responding to Senator KENNEDY’s concern. I was somewhat taken aback at his suggestion that we set aside the two amendments and allow a nongermane amendment to be offered when, in fact, on a bipartisan basis, earlier this week, we decided not to deal with pension reform.

So I want to make it clear to my colleagues that I am perfectly happy to deal with pension reform. I think a bipartisan consensus is evolving on pension reform. But we made a decision, on a bipartisan basis, earlier this week, not to put pension reform on this bill. Its day will come. I want to make that clear.

Madam President, let me try to respond to several points that were made earlier today. I will try to be brief so that my other colleagues will have an opportunity to speak on my side of the aisle.

I want, first, to talk about stock options. Then I want to talk about the bill before us and where we go from here. And I will try to be brief on all of them.

First, let me make it clear that stock options are pretty important to the American economy. More than 6 million nonexecutive workers in America receive stock options every year. So when we finally get around to having a policy set on stock options—which I hope will be done by FASB, the accounting board—based on logic and reason—we need to take into account that 6 million people who are not executives of companies get stock options every year.

We want to be sure that we are not endangering their ability to own a piece of America with the reforms designed to deal with a few people who violated the law in some cases, who did not act honorably in some cases.

We want to be sure we do not deprive or preclude 6 million workers who are not executives—or people who did not violate the law, did not act dishonorably—from the ability to get stock options.

Let me also say, in areas such as biotechnology and the computer programming industries, that 55 percent of rank and file employees get stock options.

So I just want to urge, as we are going about our business here, with all this talk about people who have made millions, that we do not forget that millions of Americans benefit from this, and we need to be careful about what we are doing.

Let me say, secondly—and Senator Bayh made the point today—I made it last week—if you listen to what is being said in this debate, a big point is made of the fact that in 1994 we saw an explosion in the use of stock options and low-interest loans and other nonconventional forms of executive compensation.

What happened to trigger that is in 1993, as a gratuitous provision in the 1993 tax bill, we changed the law so that if you are compensating an executive in corporate America and you pay that executive more than $1 million a year, you cannot count that compensation as a business expense. Of the top 30 companies in America, the level of compensation at that point was already substantially above the million-dollar mark. So because of what Congress did in 1994, having passed a law that said you could not pay people with a paycheck above a certain level and have it count as a business expense, we imposed on businesses, on accountants and financial planners and people who were smart enough to make over $1 million a year found other ways to receive compensation.

So I want to make it clear that the point I am making is, if you are looking for somebody to point the finger of blame at here—and many people are trying to do that—I think Congress is a good institution to point at because Congress eliminated the ability of companies to pay their executives the old-fashioned way.

A lot has been made about who is at fault in all this. I would just simply make the following points. If somebody said to me: I know you don't know what you are talking about on this. I would just simply say: The inadequacy of GAAP accounting, which, in its current incarnation, works very well for old-style companies with assets that are written off.

GAAP accounting fits the steel industry perfectly. It fits the automobile industry pretty well. But the problem in the 1990s—when productive power became knowledge when companies with relatively little in the way of assets gained huge market caps because of people's assessment of their know-how and the technology embodied by the company—was that GAAP accounting did not keep pace with the reality of the world that we live in today and that we lived in the 1990s.

It is very complicated to try to figure out what the values of these companies actually are by any conventional method when you are adding up their acquisition cost of assets and deprecating those assets.

This created a giant void in GAAP accounting in the 1990s, and people pushed the envelope within that void. In some cases, it appears they violated the law; in other cases, they have certainly violated standards of ethics.

Nothing we are doing in this bill is going to solve the problem in GAAP accounting. I am confident that over time we will find new ways of developing generally accepted accounting principles that don't rely on concepts such as goodwill, which don't make a lot of sense economically. But I do believe the bill before us is a step in the right direction.

There are differences of opinion. Before we go to final passage, I want to make clear what those differences are. Senator SARBANES and I both believe that we should have an independent accounting board. We both believe that we should have one that is big enough to encompass the world and that ethics standards. We both believe that part of setting ethics standards is looking at auditor independence.
good job. I do not agree with him on each and every part of it, but he has always been open. We have had many good discussions. I am confident that in the end we will write a bill that will be broadly supported and that will be in the best interests of our country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the hour of 4:55 having arrived, the Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

SUPPLEMENTAL BILL.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, there is a game afoot over the critical issue of homeland security. It is a political game which could have disastrous consequences.

The White House is talking big about homeland security, exhibiting strong presidential interest in homeland secuity, and publicizing alerts. I could go on, but suffice it to say that this administration and insisted on significant funding increases for homeland security.

President Bush’s own appointees have but begged the President’s OMB Director for additional funds to fight the war on terrorism here at home. Many of these requests are urgent and quite compelling, yet the OMB has continually rejected a surprising number of these pleas. It is as if this administration has delivered an internal unfunded mandate to its own cabinet secretaries and Federal workers. Fight the war on terrorism on every front here in the homeland. Fight vigorously. Spare nothing, but make sure you do it on a shoestring. Protect our people here at home, but protect them on the cheap.

The Department of Energy proposed a total of $380 million to fund projects to enhance the security of radioactive materials here at home and overseas, including: better security measures to safeguard the transport of nuclear weapons within the United States; improvements in the ways in which we secure and store plutonium; cleaning up, transporting, and protecting low-level radioactive materials that could be used in a “dirty bomb.”

For these and similar activities $380 million was asked for by the Secretary of Energy. But do you know what? This request fell on deaf ears at the Of-ice of Management and Budget. Despite all of the worrying and nail biting about what would happen if some luntatic obtained radioactive material and detonated a “dirty bomb” on the mail in Washington, or in some other large city, the OMB provided less than $27 million or about 7 percent of the Energy Department’s request. Let me say that again: The OMB provided less than $27 million or about 7 percent of the Energy Department’s request. This urgent supplemental bill contains $361 million for the Department to dedicate to securing these dangerous and vulerable materials. That is $334 million above the amount requested by the President.

Another striking omission from the Bush supplemental request for homeland security involved efforts to deport those individuals who entered the country on a visa and now expired. Currently there are an estimated 8 million undocumented immigrants in the United States and only 2,000 interior immigration enforcement officers nationwide. This is a very dangerous situation. We know that terrorists live and plot their crimes among us. The Immigration and Naturalization Ser-cie requested $52 million for analysts to help find, arrest and deport high-risk individuals who have disregarded the departure dates on their visas.

OMB said no, nada, nix. It denied the entire request. The supplemental bill, now stuck in conference because of the administration’s latest demands, con-ains $25 million that the Appropriations Committee believes the INS can use.

This administration insists on the need to locate some of these individuals. We also include $88 million for construction and equipping of border facilities, and for improved border inspections.

Last fall, OMB denied $1.5 billion in funding which the FBI requested in the wake of the attack on the twin towers in New York. Part of the FBI’s funding request was for acceleration of a new computer system that will be at the heart of all communications within the bureau. Also included in the request were funds to enhance the internal security of the FBI’s systems and procedures; for “cyber cops” and for hazardous materials personnel. The Congress provided $175 million and the President’s request to permit completion of the new computer system much earlier than would be allowed under the Bush plan. In addition, we have in-

mittee—$175 million for cyber security and counter terrorism in the supplemental that the White House is now delaying—delayed at the last minute last Thursday evening.

I could go on, but suffice it to say that this administration talks a good game about homeland security but it is unwilling to put its money where its mouth is.

Over this past weekend, during his radio address, the President said that, “Strengthening our economy and protecting our people. Hollow rhetoric on homeland security will never replace solid funding for these needs.

Political gamesmanship over issues so critical to our Nation and our people is irresponsible, arrogant and totally out of line. I deplore the arrogance with which the good faith efforts of both Houses of Congress have been treated by this White House. Apparently the security and safety of this nation and its people have taken a back seat to gamesmanship by a White House that has no respect for the people’s representatives or for the people’s urgent needs.

Under OMB Director Mitch Daniels’ stewardship, the Federal budget has gone from a surplus of $127 billion in FY 2001 to an estimated deficit for the current fiscal year of $165 billion. This is a swing of $292 billion in just one year.

The President is now threatening to veto the urgent national defense and homeland defense supplemental appropriations bill based on Mr. Daniels recommendation. Why? Mr. Daniels asserts that the bill spends too much money. Yet the conference report’s spending levels that have been agreed to on a bipartisan and bicameral basis would increase the deficit by only about $600 million compared to the President’s request.

Mr. Daniels believes that the critical port security, border security, firefighting and search and rescue, homeland defense and other homeland defense programs funded in the supplemental can wait because the bill would increase the deficit by about $800 million, when his failed fiscal policy has resulted in a $292 billion swing in the deficit.

The OMB Director seems to have forgotten, or perhaps never learned, that the appropriations process is about more than just numbers. Maybe at OMB, they can be bean counters, but here in Congress we are responsible for understanding what the numbers mean for the American people.

Mr. Daniels is cynically focused only on the bottom line. In an effort to make the supplemental bill look smaller, he has proposed rescinding the balance of funds under the airline loan guarantee program. He asserts that this would produce $1.1 billion of savings. Yet these funds under the law cannot be spent. There are no real savings here. The Congressional Budget Office would count savings for this proposal. This is the kind of phony accounting that is getting our nation’s corporations in trouble.

This phony accounting is proof that the President’s veto threat is only about proving that he can force the Congress to hit some arbitrary bottom line. And the unmitigated gall of a high White House official coming to the Congress with an accounting gimmick at a time when that same White House is decrying phony accounting practices and scandals in the business community is beyond belief.

We should not delay this conference one more day. There are some in Congress who suggest that we should throw our hands up on this bill and wait until the next fiscal year to address these priorities. Such statements ignore the critical needs facing the nation for defense and homeland security. Our fighting men and women need this money to prosecute the war on terrorism. Dr. Dov Zakheim—the Defense Department’s comptroller—has written about the need for billions of dollars for weapons systems and equipment. It is deplorable that good will, hard work, and good intentions can be trashed by political gamesmanship when the stakes are so high.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a memorandum be printed in the RECORD which sets forth the highlights of the $7.2 billion for homeland defense in conference funding levels.

There being no objection, the material was recopied in the RECORD, as follows:

HIGHLIGHTS OF $7.2 BILLION FOR HOMELAND DEFENSE IN CONFERENCE FUNDING LEVELS

The tentative conference funding levels are $1.9 billion above the President’s request. An overview summary of the $1.9 billion increase with examples of changes to the President’s homeland defense proposal follows.

$701 million for the Border Patrol. $343 million above the President’s request, including:

$150 million for firefighters, with the funds going directly to the local firefighters. The President did not request supplemental funds despite the fact that over $3.0 billion in ap and local governments can have information received for the $360 million currently available.

$100 million for State and local governments for improving interoperability of communications equipment for fire, police and emergency medical technicians, none of which was required through existing FEMA and Justice programs. The new, centralized program at FEMA, proposed by the President in FY 2003 for $500 million, is joint with the National Institute of Standards and Technology to take the lead in developing uniform standards for interoperable State and local law enforcement and emergency medical communications equipment.

$151 million for the Justice Department. $151 million above the President’s request to give to State and local governments for improved training and equipment for law enforcement personnel (rather than through FEMA). Funds would also be used to improve the processing of security clearances for state and local first responders so that State and local governments can have information on potential security risks and to promote mutual aid agreements to coordinate the response of State and local governments to a terrorist attack.

$95 million. $134 million below the request. $25 million for FEMA grants to State and local governments to update operation and rescue plans and to improve State emergency operations centers. $25 million is approved for a new, unauthorized program requested by the President to improve the investigation and prosecution of anti-war protesters. The proposal establishes a Citizen Corps within FEMA to promote volunteer service for emergency preparedness.

$54 million, $22 million above the President’s request for FEMA’s search and rescue teams. Currently, there are 28 FEMA search and rescue teams around the country that can be deployed to major disasters to assist local first responders in search and rescue operations. Funding will be used to upgrade equipment and training for responding to events involving a biological, chemical or radiological attack.

$37.1 million of unfunded request for the National Institute of Standards and Technology for developing uniform guidelines for chemical, biological and radiological detection equipment ($17.1 million) and for developing best practice standards for homeland security technologies ($20 million).

$15.9 million for the Federal Law Enforcement Training Ministration to expand training capacity for law enforcement personnel of the new Transportation Security Administration.

$739 million for port security programs, $465 million above the President’s request, including:

$25 million for port security grants through the Transportation Security Administration. Last Fall, Congress approved $93 million of requested funds for port security. DOD requested an additional $237 million to pay for the $93 million we provided. Despite this, the President did not request additional funds.

$526 million for the Coast Guard for port and maritime security. $273 million above the President’s request. Increased funds are needed to: expand the feasibility assessment at our nation’s ports, rather than follow the Administration’s current plan to do the assessments over the next five years; acquire new maritime safety and security teams; purchase a total of six homeland security response boats; and expand aviation assets as well as the shore facilities to support them.

$39 million for Customs to target and inspect suspect shipping containers at overseas ports before they reach U.S. ports. The Administration requested no funds for this activity.

$19.3 million, as requested for 34 additional permanent port inspection and port security officers, for improved fraud detection, for improved fraud detection, for improved fraud detection, for improved fraud detection, for improved fraud detection.

$251 million for bioterrorism funding, $251 million above the President’s request, including:

$251 million for the Centers for Disease Control for improved and secure facilities, including toxicology and infectious disease testing. Money for an emergency operation center and for information technology security.

$235 million, $209 million above the President’s request to improve our nuclear weapons facilities (Energy requested the funds, but the White House did not request them). Funding would be used to improve security at the nuclear weapons stockpile, the national nuclear labs and our nuclear weapons plants. Funds are included to establish a 911 system for local first responders when called upon to respond to nuclear hazards, enhanced funding for the National Center for Combating Terrorism, expansion of radiological search teams, and establishment of a National Response Team at Andrews Air Force Base. Funds would also be used to consolidate nuclear materials sites so few locations need to be protected. Several requested items that are approved include funds to improve security on the electrical grid and funds to improve our capability to detect radiation.

$147 million, $128 million above the President’s request for cyber security to help deal with the threat to Federal and private information systems. $82.4 million is provided to Justice to improve the investigation and prosecution of cyber crime, research to improve the detection of cyber crime, “data warfare” and “cyberspace defense” to help expose cyber crime and for information sharing. $20 million is provided to Commerce to develop standards for security processes for system security certification and to develop guidelines and benchmarks for secure information systems. Funding is also needed to improve anti-missile detection systems. $25 million is provided to the Energy Department to improve cyber security at our nuclear weapons plants and labs.

$11.2 million for the National Science Foundation for scholarships to develop cyber security skills.

$20 million for border security, $18 million more than requested, including $52 million for Immigration and Naturalization Service Construction to improve... facilities on our nation’s borders, $25 million for better equipment for the additional personnel that are being hired with the funds Congress provided at Fall and $5.7 million for the Justice Department to deploy FBI personnel. The Department of Defense requests the IDENTIAFIS system for rapid response criminal background checks by the INS of suspect aliens prior to their admission to the United States; $57 million for INS for identifying and removing immigration felons from the country and for information technology enhancements.

$100 million of unrequested funding for the Department of Agriculture to enhance our nation’s food safety capabilities and to protect some of our nation’s most vulnerable plants and animals from disease: to increase support for the Food Safety and Inspection Service, especially to ensure the safety of imported products; for improved security at USDA labs in order to secure bio-hazardous materials; funding for the Extension Service to provide emergency training for first response in rural areas; for FDA to improve the ability to inspect imported products such as medical devices that contain or are susceptible to being contaminated with radiation; and for vulnerability assessments and security improvements to protect rural water systems.

$471 million of unrequested funding for airport security, including $150 million to improve security at medium hub airports to have all of the funds necessary to implement the FAA’s new airport security guidelines and that large airports have some additional funding to hire personnel that are being hired with the funds Congress provided at Fall and $5.7 million for INS for identifying and removing immigration felons from the country and for information technology enhancements.

The conference funding levels include $4.1 billion for the new Transportation Security Administration, $531 million below the request for aviation security. $35 million for the Postal Service to improve protection of postal customers and postal employees from a bioterrorist attack; $44 million for the District of Columbia and the Washington Metro to improve security; consistent with the congressionally-mandated District emergency operations plan and FRMA’s emergency plan for the National Capital Region, and to construct decontamination and quarantine facilities at Children’s Hospital and the Washington Hospital Center.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I thank the chairman of the committee. Let me begin by stating that which I have said a number of times in the past, which is that the Department of Defense believe must be continued for several years because these assets are the only FAA radar capable of continually tracking aircraft with disabled transponders. In addition, $15 million is provided for improved air to ground communications for the air marshals, $4 million for radiation detection equipment for air cargo and $10 million is included for improved technology for air cargo safety and other cargo modes.

$100 million of unrequested funds for the Corps of Engineers to improve security at Corps water projects.

$92 million, $58 million above the President’s request for the FBI for counter terrorism and information technology enhancements. In total, FBI receives $375 million when $77 million of which is requested for unrequested items highlighted under port security and airport security).

The conference funding levels also include the $87 million President’s Budget request for the Postal Service to improve protection of postal customers and postal employees from a bioterrorist attack; $52 million President’s Budget for improved security of Federal buildings and $1.3 million for the Office of Homeland Security, $1.2 million below the President’s request.

the way for America’s rise as an economic superpower. I could make a strong case that the vote we are going to take today is for one of the most important bills impacting the Nation’s financial markets since the 1930s. This legislation will fundamentally change the way publicly traded companies will do business and how the accounting profession performs its statutorily required audit function.

Much has been said about what this legislation does not accomplish. Briefly, I wish to focus my remarks on what it does do and repeat, we are not solving every problem with this bill. There are a lot of other issues that need to be addressed, but we have to begin the process. It seems to me, by getting the accounting part of this equation right, and we will not know ultimately whether we have done all we could, but I think this is a major step in that direction.

The bill, we now know, creates a new independent regulator for the accounting profession. The new body will act as a strong, independent, full-time board with significant authority to regulate auditors of public companies. The independent board will have clear authority for setting auditor standards and important investigative standards. It strengthens audit reporting standards for the accounting profession and contains significant prohibitions for accountants performing nonaudit services for audit clients, and it addresses the growing conflicts of interest that have been too pervasive throughout the accounting profession.

It provides for the first time an independent Standards Accounting Board, which I think is also extremely important and one of the major reforms in this bill.

There are additional dollars to provide the SEC with more firepower. If you will, to have more cops on the street so we might avoid some of the problems that have occurred in the past.

It also improves corporate governance requirements and improves corporate disclosures. The bill grants additional authority and responsibility to the audit committees of publicly traded companies.

Those are very important steps. The provisions of the bill were carefully considered. We had 10 hearings, and by a vote of 17 to 4, the committee—the Presiding Officer being one—passed out this very fine legislation.

Additionally, during floor consideration of this bill, Senator LEAHY of Vermont added new criminal penalties for securities fraud. I commend him and strongly endorse the provision that won the overwhelming support of the Members. I hope it will add to our efforts in restoring investor confidence.

One of the last issues I would like to address, because it has been talked about so much, is the stock options issue, which involved a lot of debate and discussion of the last number of days. I commend our colleague from Michigan, Senator LEVIN, who has made an extraordinary effort to find a resolution to this issue we all can support. Obviously, this question inspired more questions in many ways, but I commend him for his thoughtfulness and energy that he has brought to this debate.

The issue of whether or not stock options will be regulated is not an issue that is going to go away. It has to be addressed. I must admit, I am swayed by those who have a great deal of expertise in this area: Alan Greenspan, Warren Buffett, Paul Volcker, all of whom support the expensing of stock options.

I also recognize the danger when Congress begins the process of legislating accounting standards. My friend from Texas and I have been involved in the past when there have been efforts by people who wanted to have us vote on some of these matters. I recall 3 or 4 years ago the debate was over pooling and purchasing accounting standards. I was very sympathetic to the arguments made by those advocates if we were as a member of FASB, I think I would have voted to allow that accounting standard to go forward, but the idea that the Senate might vote by 51 to 49 to pick one accounting standard over another is just laughable. We do not want to set a precedent, in my view, of the Congress of the United States deciding what accounting practices ought to be. That is why we set up these boards to do the job.

The approach taken by having the Accounting Standards Board, the SEC, and others look at these matters and get back to us with their recommendations is the appropriate and proper way to go. Despite the temptation of others to want to belittle these matters explicitly on the floor, I remind my colleagues who have done that in the past, we inevitably regret doing it when we set precedents such as those and are only duplicated by other ideas that temporarily may be very popular, may be politically attractive, but may be terrible economics as well.

I applaud the effort to approach the stock option issue in the manner in which it has been addressed. I mentioned in the legislation my colleague from Texas as well. He and I worked many years on a lot of matters affecting the financial services sector of our economy. He does not have that many days left with us, and I am going to miss him. I told him that privately, and I tell him publicly that he is a valued Member of this institution. Whether we agree or disagree on matters he has taken great pride to go through yet. Again, my compliments to Senator SARBANES.

What we are doing is important. This is extremely important legislation. I think it may be more important what message it is we are sending; that we are not sitting in the bleachers, we are not just standing by as these events unfold. All Members of this Chamber can take great pride that the Senate of the United States has responded with a responsible bill we think is going to make a difference. I yield the floor.

Mr. SARBANES. What is the time situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland controls almost 14 minutes, and the Senator from Texas controls just under 12 minutes.

Mr. SARBANES. I yield 4 minutes to those interested in doing so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mrs. CARNAHAN. Mr. President, my amendment requires that corporate insiders, such as CEOs, trade the stock of the companies they manage, they must take reasonable steps to disclose those transactions to their shareholders. Current law requires that insiders file disclosure forms with the Securities and Exchange Commission. However, almost all of these forms are filed on paper and average investors have no practical way of seeing these disclosures. My amendment requires that these disclosures be filed electronically and that the SEC make these disclosures available to the public over the Internet.

This amendment also requires that corporations disclose insider transactions on their own websites. Investors have a right to know if corporate officers are dumping their stock. However, it is meaningless to require these disclosures if investors have no practical way of ever seeing these disclosures. My amendment requires that these disclosures be filed electronically and that the SEC make these disclosures available to the public over the Internet. My amendment ensures that investors have access to this important information.

In the 3 years leading up to its bankruptcy, as Enron’s top officers dumped the company’s stock, they sold more than $1.1 billion worth of their own holdings. Ken Lay alone sold more than $100 million worth of Enron stock while Enron insiders bought stock. Ken Lay alone sold more than $1.1 billion worth of their own holdings. Cindy Olsen, was asked by employees if she should invest 100 percent of their retirement funds in Enron. She replied: ‘‘Absolutely.’’ But within 3 months she personally unloaded $1 million worth of Enron stock. Had Enron employees only known, they might have been skeptical about this advice.

Investors are entitled to know how executives are acting with their own stock. That is why my amendment will ensure they will.

I yield my remaining time back to the Senator from Maryland.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I yield 8 minutes to Senator Enzi, and might I say on my time, not his 8 minutes, that I want to thank Senator Enzi for his contribution to this bill for his work from beginning to end. He has been a major contributor to the bill. He has proven that knowledge sometimes is a nice thing to have.

Our standard in Washington for objective language, and I am off the turnip truck and you know absolutely nothing and therefore you are objective, but I would say that Senator Enzi proves that it is nice every once in awhile to have somebody who knows what he is talking about. I think in many ways, large and small, the good things in this bill he has had a very positive impact on and the bad things in this bill he could not do anything about anyway—that was a joke. I would say to the Senator from Maryland.

In any case, I do want to congratulate Senator Enzi for all the contributions he has made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized for 8 minutes.

Mr. ENZI. I thank the Senator from Texas for his gracious comments.

It has been mentioned several times today that there is nervousness in the stock market. There has been since we started debating this issue. I am very convinced that some of that is because people may read some of the amendments that have been suggested and recognize the legislative principle that, if it is worth reacting to, it is worth overreacting to. That ought to be enough to scare anybody.

We have had extensive debate. In fact, one reporter I talked to asked me if we were going to pass the McCain bill. The reporter talked about the accounting reform bill. He asked this question. I said, you know, that is the Sarbanes bill we have been working on. It is not stock options, in spite of the threat we had the other day.

We usually do bills the way we have done this one—with a lot of cooperative talk. We then make arrangements to develop the best possible outcome. The accounting reform bill before us is designed in such a way that we set up processes that people with accountabilities and people how to do the work that is the Sarbanes bill we have been working on. It is not stock options, in spite of the threat we had the other day.

filed 415. Officer and Director Bars for 2000 were 38—this year so far 71. Subpoenaed enforcement proceedings in 2000 were 9—this year 18. The numbers go on and on. My point is that Chairman Pitt seems to be left cleaning up the mess—his predecessor left in corporate America?

I offer my support for these actions taken by Chairman Pitt. Instead of attacking him, I am more concerned about what was happening at the SEC that bred this climate where executives felt compelled to engage in this unethical behavior. Why weren’t some of these actions taken three or four years ago? Did the SEC Chairman not see the potential conflicts that could arise out of research analysts getting compensation based on investment banking business?

Therefore, I would say that I commend Chairman Pitt for the work he is doing. From what I understand, the actions he is taking at the SEC have struck fear throughout the corporate community that they had better get their act together.

This legislation before us now will also go far in restoring faith in the markets. It will provide assurances to investors that will not sit back and watch executives shatter the retirement dreams of workers while leaving themselves with millions of dollars. It will show the American people that we will work to make financial statements transparent and accurate to the public. It will also make sure they know as much about the company’s financial state as possible.

The legislation builds an accounting oversight board to oversee the accountants who prepare financial statements of public companies. This board will have broad authority to enforce and discipline rules by which accountants must live. The board will have full access to accounting firms’ records and policies. It will have the authority to task an audit committee of outside directors to examine the independence and autonomy of its auditors. Accountants must know that someone is watching over them to require that their work is in the best interest of investors. This legislation will also provide for the SEC to have the resources they need to enforce the law.

However, I also do not want this legislation to provide a payday for the trial lawyers. The competitiveness of the accounting industry is a matter of concern, and we can ill afford to lose another firm. It is solely because we didn’t offer proper protections in this legislation. I am in no way indicating that accounting firms should have new, special protections. The only thing I am asking is that the funding of these firms remains to more liability after this bill is enacted than they were before.

I am not sure some Members truly understand the situation facing accounting firms. We are down to the final four firms. These are the only firms that have the expertise and resources to audit companies such as Microsoft, Coca-Cola, and the thousands of other large companies. If we subject them to the will of the trial bar, it will only be a matter of time before we lose the rest of the firms one by one.

I know that, given what has happened recently with the restatements, I am not alone in thinking that Congress is in a position to make these firms more independent and easier to legislate them. I agree we do need legislation, but what also needs to be understood is that over-legislating could be drastic to the economy. In the long run, if we over-legislate, it could be detrimental for the future of capital formation in this country.

Once again, I thank the Chairman for all of the work he and his staff have done with this legislation. I think it is a good bill, and I do intend to support it. I also think it will continue to improve through the Conference process and when all is said and done, investors will respond positively to passage of this legislation.

I wish to talk about the Financial Accounting Standards Boards, known as FASB, which has been referenced many times throughout the course of discussion on the underlying accounting bill, the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002.

Some of the pending amendments have referenced FASB and directed or mandated it to change how companies must expense stock options or to perform a study on how to expense stock options. In the McCain amendment sets the accounting standard for expensing stock options, without allowing FASB to set rules on this form of expensing. The Levin amendment mandates FASB conduct a one-year study on expensing stock options, and then adopt a rule based on a narrow set of external parameters. The Levin amendment implicates a desire to have such expensing done.

In order to understand some of the problems with these kinds of amendments, it is important to understand exactly what FASB does. Since 1973, FASB has been the designated organization in the private sector for establishing standard of financial accounting and reporting. In short, those standards govern the preparation of all financial reports.

The mission of FASB is “to establish and improve standards of financial accounting and reporting in the public and private, including issuers, auditors and users of financial information.”

To accomplish this mission, FASB acts to improve the usefulness of financial reporting; keep standards current; and reflect changes in the methods of doing business and the economic environment; consider any significant areas of deficiency in financial reporting; promote the international convergence of accounting standards together with improving the quality of financial reporting. As we all know, it is common knowledge that understanding of the nature and purposes of information contained in financial reports.

FASB follows certain precepts in its activities. One is to be objective in its decision making. Another is to carefully weigh the views of its constituents in developing concepts and standards. But its ultimate determination is based on research, public input and careful deliberation. It also aspires to promulgate standards only when the expected benefits exceed the perceived costs.

Overall, FASB was created to serve as an independent agency with an independent agenda. However, FASB is currently funded by companies and accounting firms. The long standing concern was that FASB did not act wholly independently, and succumbed to industry pressures in order to get the funding it needed to operate. Back in 1993 and 1994, when expenses of stock options was an issue, some critics say FASB succumbed to pressure by industry and Congress did not act to a dual method of either expensing stock options at the time of grant, or placing the information in a footnote as a form of public disclosure of possible stock dilution.

The underlying accounting law bill fixes this perceived problem of independence and autonomy by providing FASB with funding from both issuers and the accounting firms. Because of this change, FASB will not be completely independent from the very companies it will set standards for in the future. This is a good start.

It is also important to understand that, historically, FASB has never been directed by Congress. Congress legislation to adopt one particular standard for accounting, including expense accounting. It has also never been directed by Congress to perform a study. FASB’s role is not to perform studies for Congress and Congress should not be bogged down performing them for political purposes.

Following that precedent, the Senate Banking Committee made certain that the bill did not direct Congress to take any particular action. In other words, there is no federal mandate to FASB, nor should there be, if it is to remain an independent authority. In addition, why should Congress, a body without expertise in accounting standards for publicly traded companies, set these standards?

I, and many other members, as well as Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, believe that Congress has not been effective setting standards. Instead, the Securities and Exchange Commission and FASB are the entities with the expertise needed to make these types of determinations.

Ordinarily, FASB establishes plans with milestones it works towards. Congress should not dictate what plans and milestones it should work towards or address. FASB also never sets artificial deadlines on when to reach a conclusion. As an independent agency, it has the flexibility to develop its determinations and sets rules, without adhering to outside pressures or time-tables. Just as Congress should not set accounting standards for FASB to follow. It also should not set artificial deadlines for FASB to adhere to either. Nevertheless, some members have filed amendments asking FASB to not only take a specific action, but instructing FASB to do so in a specific timeframe. One amendment actually sets an accounting standard, thereby instructing FASB to immediately change expensing standards. Another mandates FASB complete an expensing study within a year. These amendments set unrealistic timetables and mandates.

It is important to remember that FASB already has its hands full with important projects to help improve financial standards and reporting. It is currently working towards promulgating high profile rules in the areas of accounting for intangibles; accounting for special purpose entities; accounting for guarantees; and a final rule on liabilities and equity. FASB has also added to its agenda a project to research and create a rule on revenue recognition.

Let us not forget that the improper use of those entities played a role in the downfall of Enron. Stock options had nothing to do with Enron’s bankruptcy. The projects FASB is concentrating on are important projects which will help clarify financial statements for investors. FASB itself needs to cue up and prioritize its projects based on what is more important to financial accounting and reporting. Congress should not dictate what those priorities should be or the timetable it must adhere to.

If some of the amendments we are looking at are accepted, Congress will establish a bad precedent of setting up a timetable and prioritizing projects for FASB. Congress will be putting stock option expensing—an accounting standard which did not cause the collapse of Enron or the demise of other big companies—at the front of the cue. And another question we need to ask ourselves is whether FASB has the manpower to perform the mandates and timetables Congress would be providing through the McCuin and Levin amendments. Already, FASB is shifting its personnel to different projects to try to timely promulgate needed rules. While the underlying accounting bill will help these staffing problems by providing independent funding, in the short term, FASB cannot possibly perform the mandates of some of the amendments within the tight time frames given.

I hope I have given members some solid reasoning on why Congress should not begin setting accounting standards and, why we really be doing something we do not fully understand? There are already agencies to perform this type of rulemaking, and they are the SEC and FASB. They are fully aware of the debate surrounding stock options and need to make FASB to make a new rule. I am certain if FASB deems it appropriate, it will be looking at this issue in the future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SARBNES. Mr. President, I yield 4 minutes to the junior Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, in the final analysis, it is again to persuade my colleagues to accept by unanimous consent my amendment dealing with corporate bankruptcy. Let me again say what this amendment is. It says that during the 12 months preceding a bankruptcy, CEOs who have received stock options, bonuses and other performance-based payments shall not be able to keep that kind of compensation. If they ride a company down to bankruptcy, they know the inside details of that company and got incentive-based compensation, including stock options, they ought not ride off in the sunset with a pocketful of gold while the employees and investors lose everything they have. That is not the right thing. A bankruptcy disgorge, potential ought to be part of this bill. Everyone in this Chamber knows it should be part of this bill. Former SEC Chairman Breeden, a Republican, says it ought to be in this bill. I quoted other CEOs who say it should. Passage without it and this bill is incomplete.

My colleague said he thought maybe the market, which has been so volatile recently, has been frightened by amendments that have been considered into this bill. I think this Congress should be a good Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRAMM. I do not think so. I think this Congress should be a good Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. DORGAN. We have a provision in this bill. If you violate the law, then you have to give back what you have earned from the company in terms of any kind of incentive in bonus. But to say that people who work for a company that goes bankrupt has to give back compensation is to guarantee that a company that is in trouble would never get anybody to go work for them. They would never have an opportunity to be saved. That amendment does not belong in this bill. We have a provision in this bill. If you violate the law, then you have to give back what you have earned from the company in terms of any kind of incentive in bonus. [Laughter.]

But to say that people who work for a company that goes bankrupt has to give back compensation is to guarantee that a company that is in trouble would never get anybody to go work for them. They would never have an opportunity to be saved. That amendment does not belong in this bill. It makes no sense in the logic.

Mr. DORGAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President. I think so, but I don’t think you can have a Senographic hearing, if you don’t have a Senator. I think we have a Senographic hearing, if you don’t have a Senator. I think we have a Senographic hearing, if you don’t have a Senator.

Mr. DORGAN. How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty seconds.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President. This is, of course, the last chance for amendments, and a pretty sad book. I know people will go up to the gallery—and I understand someone is at a press conference from the other side—claiming credit for this bill. I want to know who wants to run up to the press conference and claim credit for preventing an amendment that says you must disgorge ill-gotten gains, incentive-based compensation, if you ran a company into bankruptcy. I want somebody to go to the press gallery and take credit for blocking that kind of legislation. Tomorrow I want to read about it. Who takes credit? Someone ought to take credit for blocking an amendment that is in this bill. Amendment does not belong in this bill. It makes no sense in the logic.

Mr. DORGAN. How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Time.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, perhaps we ought to go up to the press conference and say, ‘Do you want to block this bill?’ I think we ought to do that. I want to talk about the SEC, but I don’t have time at the moment. I will save that for another day.

This process has been a travesty of the Senate, in my judgment, having someone as a gatekeeper and preventing us from bringing up germane amendments. It does not make sense. That is not the way the Senate is supposed to work.

I ask unanimous consent to lay aside the Edwards and Carnahan amendments so I may offer amendment 4214 on bankruptcy disgorgement.

Mr. GRAMM. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Time.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, this is, of course, the last chance for amendments, and a pretty sad book. I know people will go up to the gallery—and I understand someone is at a press conference from the other side—claiming credit for this bill. I want to know who wants to run up to the press conference and claim credit for preventing an amendment that says you must disgorge ill-gotten gains, incentive-based compensation, if you ran a company into bankruptcy. I want somebody to go to the press gallery and take credit for blocking that kind of legislation. Tomorrow I want to read about it. Who takes credit? Someone ought to take credit for blocking an amendment that is in this bill. Amendment does not belong in this bill. It makes no sense in the logic.

Mr. DORGAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President. I will not yield. If you did something wrong, making you give back what you earned belongs in this bill. And it is in this bill. Not only belongs, it is here.

But to simply say because somebody worked for a company that broke, that they have to give back compensation, that sounds great in the environment we are in, but, look, I have a company, we are in deep trouble, and we try to go out and hire a top-notch person to come in and save us, and we pay him a compensation to try to do it. To say we will take it back if he fails, as if that is an ill-gotten gain, I am sorry, I don’t think that is good economic policy. I don’t think it is smart. It has nothing to do with the provisio
Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute.

Mr. DORGAN. I deeply appreciate the Senator from Maryland yielding.

What the Senator from Texas misses is we are talking about incentive-based compensation. Someone who gets incentives for running the corporation into bankruptcy be able to keep that? I don’t think so for somebody that gets a big bonus while he runs the company into bankruptcy, or for someone that gets big stock options while she runs the company into bankruptcy.

The Senator tried to win a debate we were not having. He says we will take compensation away from someone who is engaged in wrecking for a corporation that went into bankruptcy. No, this is about incentive-based compensation and profits. It is not about taking away their salary. It is about saying if you are paid on an incentive basis and you are running a corporation into bankruptcy, you ought not to be getting the bonus. If you did, you ought to give it back. You ought not to get stock options; if you did, you ought to give it back.

This is simply about something my friend has missed. It is about incentive-compensation and the fact that you ought not walk out of a corporation you ran into bankruptcy with a pocketful of gold while you left the employees and the investors flat on their back. This is not an amendment that is hard to understand.

I regret very much it has been blocked. I regret especially we were not allowed to talk on this amendment. That is the travesty, in my judgment.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I think you could debate whether the amendment is understood or not. I think I understand it perfectly. In fact, there are people in this country who are turnaround specialists, who are hired to try to save companies. If somebody did something wrong, if they violated the law, then make them give back compensation. They put them to death, if you want to put them to death. But to simply say, if you hire somebody with an incentive package to save the company, and the company goes broke, that you are going to take it back, that is up to the bankruptcy court to decide.

So this ill-gotten gain business is good rhetoric, but it has absolutely nothing to do with this amendment. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields to the Senator from Texas, and 5 minutes remaining, the Senator from Texas has 30 seconds.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, what is the time situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland has 5 minutes remaining, the Senator from Texas has 30 seconds.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland should have the right to end the debate.

I think we have two bills: One in the Senate, one in the House. We can come up with a better bill than either. I think America will survive under either bill. Given the environment we are in, that represents some achievement, and I am proud of it.

I think we will come out of conference with a better bill than the House bill and a better bill than the Senate bill. I think people will be proud of what we did.

If I were an investor today, and I had a lot of money, I would invest in the stock market today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. The Senator from Maryland has 4 minutes 45 seconds remaining.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, we have been trying to clear amendments. We have already—not yesterday, but on Friday we adopted three amendments on the basis of a unanimous consent request. We have worked through two additional amendments. I am going to offer them now.

One is an amendment by Senator SHELBY for a study with respect to aider and abettor violations of the Federal securities law. I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside; that the Shelby amendment, No. 4261, be called up and modified with a modification that I send to the desk; that the amendment as modified be agreed to; and then we then return to the regular order which, as I understand it, would be the Edwards as modified by the Carnahan amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4261, AS MODIFIED

Mr. SARBANES. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maryland (Mr. SARBANES) for Mr. SHELBY, proposes an amendment numbered 4261, as modified.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To require the SEC to conduct a study and submit a report to the Congress on aider and abettor violations of the Federal securities laws)

On page 108 after line 15, insert the following:

"(c)(1) The Commission shall conduct a study to determine based upon information for the period from January 1, 1998 to December 31, 2001:

"[(A) the number of ‘securities professionals,’ which term shall mean public accountants, public accounting firms, investment banking firms, investment bankers, brokers, dealers, attorneys, and other securities professionals practicing before the Commission;]

"[(ii) who have been found to have aided and abetted a violation of the Federal securities laws, including rules or regulations promulgated thereunder (hereinafter collectively referred to as ‘Federal securities laws’), but who have not been sanctioned, disciplined, or otherwise penalized as a primary violator in any administrative action or civil proceeding, including any settlement of such actions or proceedings (referred to hereinafter as ‘aiders and abettors’)]"

"(B) a description of the Federal securities laws violated;"

"(ii) the specific sanctions and penalties imposed upon, such aiders and abettors and primary violators, including the amount of any monetary penalties assessed upon and collected from such persons;"

"(iii) the occurrence of multiple violations by the same person or persons either as an aider or abettor or as a primary violator; and
"(iv) whether as to each such violator disciplinary sanctions have been imposed, including any censure, suspension, temporary bar, or permanent bar to practice before the Commission; and"

"(C) the amount of disgorgement, restitution or any other fines or payments the Commission has (i) assessed upon and (ii) collected from aiders and abettors and from primary violators.

The amendment (No. 4261), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. SARBANES. Was the Ensign amendment on that amendment?

I urge the adoption of the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments have been agreed to.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. GRAMM. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SARBANES. President, in the regular order we are back with the Edwards and Carnahan amendments pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. I have a couple of minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There remains 1 minute.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I think the Senate is about to take a major step to contributing to the restoration of investor confidence.

This legislation establishes a strong independent board to oversee auditors of the public companies. The board can set standards, investigate, and discipline accountants. It will be overseen by the SEC, but it will have independent funding and membership. I think this marks the end of weak self-regulation with respect to public company accounting.

It addresses pervasive conflicts of interest by ensuring auditor independence by restricting them from providing a defined list of consulting services. Other consulting services on the part of the auditor can be permitted if preapproved by the company’s audit company.

This legislation strengthens corporate responsibility. It establishes safeguards to protect investors/analysts on the part of the auditor to ensure the financial statements are correct and company audits are carried out independently. It strengthens investor confidence by ensuring that the mandates of the public companies are met.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CRAPO), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CRAPO), and the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 97, nays 0, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAYTON). On this vote, the yeas are 94, the nays are 3. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and affirmed having voted in the affirmative, the motion is agreed to.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I will support this nomination of Lavenski R. Smith of Arkansas, to be a U.S. Circuit Judge. I did so as a member of the Judiciary Committee, and I will do so again on the floor. But I will also support the effort made by the Senator from Arizona, Mr. MCCAIN, to advance the long overdue appointment of a commissioner to the expired position on the Federal Elections Commission, and in doing so I opposed the cloture motion to bring debate on the Smith nomination. As you have seen, the FEC commissioners have a direct impact on Federal election laws, even to the extent of obstructing the will of Congress. Given the recent behavior of the FEC, it is reasonable for us to take every appropriate step to facilitate the filing of the expired position.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise today in support of Justice Lavenski Smith to the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals. Before I speak directly about him and his nomination, however, I would like to take just a moment to explain where the Senate stands on its job of considering and confirming President Bush’s judicial nominees during this Congress.

The Senate has not confirmed a single judge since May 13, exactly 9 weeks ago today. This is nothing short of irresponsible considering the vacancy rates and backlogs around the country.

There were 31 vacancies in the Federal courts when President Bush sent us his first 11 circuit nominees on May 9, 2001, and there are 31 today. We are barely keeping pace with the rate of attrition.

The Sixth Circuit is half-staffed with 8 of its 16 seats vacant. The DC Circuit is two-thirds staffed, with 4 of its 12 seats sitting vacant. Meanwhile, seven of President Bush’s first 11 nominees have not even been scheduled for hearings—despite having been pending for 432 days as of today. A total of 21 circuit court nominations now sit pending for those 31 vacancies. But we have confirmed only 3 circuit judges this year, and only 9 since President Bush took office.

It has been hard enough that the Judiciary Committee has been slow to even begin the process of consideration by scheduling hearings. It is even worse that the Democrat leadership can’t do what is necessary to move the 17 judges that are still pending for a floor vote. Of course, I applaud the leadership for bringing Lavenski Smith to a vote, but I think everyone has to admit that 1 out of 17 is, at most, a low start. Many of my colleagues have noted with displeasure the Committee’s wholesale slow-walking of President Bush’s nominees, but now I must bring some attention to the Senate leadership’s role as well. It is high time for them to demonstrate their leadership, and their control of the floor, by setting votes on the rest of the 16 judicial nominees who are awaiting a final vote.

Mr. President, let me put the current situation into context. Historically, a President can count on seeing all of his first 11 circuit court nominees confirmed. Presidents Reagan, Bush, and Clinton all enjoyed a 100 percent confirmation rate on their first 11 circuit court nominees. In stark contrast, 7 of President Bush’s first 11 nominations are still pending without a hearing for over 1 whole year.

History also shows that Presidents can expect almost all of their first 100 nominees to be confirmed swiftly. Presidents Reagan, Bush and Clinton got 97, 95 and 97, respectively, of their first 100 judicial nominations confirmed. But the Senate has confirmed only 57 of President Bush’s first 100 nominees.

Some try to blame Republicans for the current vacancy crisis. That is both false. In fact, the number of judicial vacancies decreased by 3 during the 6 years of Republican leadership. There were 70 vacancies when I became chair of the Judiciary Committee in January 1996, and there were 67 at the close of the 106th Congress in December 2000.

Now I know that some try to justify the current wholesale delay as payback for the past. That is just a sleight of hand. Look at the facts: During President Clinton’s 8 years in office, the Senate confirmed 37 judges—essentially the same as Bush.

This is an unassailable record of non-partisan fairness, especially when you consider that President Reagan had 6 years of a Senate controlled by his own party, while President Clinton had only 2. Furthermore, almost 50 percent of all Federal judges currently serving are Clinton judges.

Finally, some suggest that the Republicans left an undue number of nominees pending in committee without hearings at the end of the Clinton administration. Well, we left 41, which is 13 less that the Democrats left without hearings in 1992 at the end of the Bush administration.

Mr. President, the President’s nominees deserve better; President Bush deserves better; and most importantly, the American people—the people who own this Government, and the people who own this Judiciary branch—are the ones that should own their rights and freedoms—deserve much better.

Now, Mr. President, I would like to turn to the matter directly at hand, the confirmation of Lavenski Smith to the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals. Justice Smith is a highly qualified jurist who has distinguished himself through his service to the poor, his service in the public sector, and his service on the State bench. His experience includes working for legal services, running his own law firm, serving with distinction on the Arkansas Supreme Court, and holding his current position on the Arkansas Public Service Commission.

Justice Smith began his legal career at Ozark Legal Services in Fayetteville, AR, specializing in consumer defense and the representation of juvenile offenders who have worked with those who are traditionally underrepresented: low-income individuals, families, and children. After 4 years, he opened his own law firm in the Arkansas town of Springfield, where he handled all sorts of cases, including business law, real estate, domestic relations, worker’s compensation, public benefits, and estates. Notably, his firm was the first minority-owned firm in the history of the state.

Justice Smith’s excellence as a lawyer and his commitment to public service did not go unnoticed: in 1999 Governor Huckabee appointed Justice Smith to the Arkansas Supreme Court. During his tenure on the bench, Justice Smith wrote opinions on a range of legal issues, including criminal, tort, workers compensation, insurance, contract, civil procedure, oil and gas, tax, probate and attorney discipline matters.

Currently, Justice Smith serves on the Arkansas Public Service Commission, which is responsible for regulating the State’s electric, gas, and telecommunications industries. In this position, Justice Smith has become an expert in understanding and interpreting a variety of complex federal regulations, including the Federal Power Act and the Federal Telecommunications Act of 1996.

Chief Justice Arnold of the Arkansas Supreme Court, Justice Smith’s former colleague, praises his intelligence and the quality of his service on the court, saying, “I think he’ll make a great Federal judge.” Justice Smith has wide, bipartisan support in his home State, but I think the Arkansas Democrat-Gazette summed it up well: It said that Justice Smith possesses “integrity, intelligence, and compassion.” I agree, and I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this qualified candidate for the Eighth Circuit. I think that each of us can be proud about voting for the first African-American Arkansan to serve on a circuit court of appeals.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, Lavenski Smith is a young Arkansas politician who has had a total of 7 years experience practicing law, has had minimal Federal experience, minimal appellate experience, and no experience at all arguing in front of the Federal Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit to which he has been nominated. He is nominated to the judgeship held by Judge Richard Arnold, one of the most distinguished judges ever to serve on the 8th Circuit.

Mr. Smith served a brief term on the Arkansas Supreme Court, after being appointed by the Governor and before running for election to a lower State court judicial vacancy and losing. He also spent several years as the volunteer executive director of the Arkansas chapter of the Rutherford Institute, an organization devoted to, among other things, the defense of the Governor’s constitutional right to choose, and supporting efforts against Governor, and then President, Bill Clinton.”

The following is what the Arkansas Times had to say about Mr. Smith’s qualifications:

Lavenski Smith of Little Rock is not the best-qualified Arkansas President Bush could have chosen for the U.S. 8th Circuit Court of Appeals. Not even close. Marginally acceptable, if that, Smith was nominated by Bush, on the recommendation of Senator Tim Hutchinson, because Smith is racially, ideologically and politically correct, and a conservative Republican, avidly anti-abortion and anti-Clinton, whose nomination will, it is hoped, aid Hutchinson’s re-election effort. Smith has a distinguished judicial career. Still, there are worse things than mediocrity, and Bush has nominated him, too.

It is difficult to vote in favor of a nominee to a lifetime appointment on a Federal appellate court with this kind of record, but he is supported by both of his home-State Senators. Senator Blanche Lincoln worked hard to be sure that Mr. Smith was included in a hearing earlier this year and she supports his nomination. Based on Senator Lincoln’s confidence in this nominee’s ability to do the job and based on the nominee’s assurances that he will not seek to impose his personal views in his legal opinions, I have reluctantly decided to vote in favor of this nominee.

Smith seems like an honorable person, and despite his political views and political activism, I am hopeful that he will be a moderate, or even a centrist, that he will follow the law and seek not to upset opportunities to overturn precedent or decide cases in accord with his private beliefs rather than as a judge.

This is one of 17 nominations that have been reported by the Judiciary Committee to the Senate but were stalled for the last 2 months. In addition, nearly two dozen Executive Branch nominees reported by the Judiciary Committee are also awaiting action.

The delay in final Senate action on these nominees has been due to the failure of the administration to fulfill its responsibility to work with the Senate in the naming of members of bipartisan boards and commissions. Last week I congratulated the majority leader for overcoming this impediment and for his patience and determination in achieving some movement on these matters.

I understand that he hopes to be able to resume voting on judicial nominations once cloture is achieved on the Smith nomination today.

Democrats are taking extraordinary efforts to overcome impediments to action on nominations. Had the administration not caused this delay, and had Republican Senators not placed “holds” over the last several months, I am confident that the Senate would have confirmed more than 70 judicial nominees by now.

We were able to overcome the other obstacles created by the administration and proceed to confirm 57 judicial nominees in our first 10 months in the majority, a record outpacing any Republican total in any 10-month period in which they held the majority.

We have also addressed long-standing vacancies on circuit courts caused by Republican obstruction of President Clinton's judicial nominees. We held the first hearing for a Fifth Circuit nominee in 7 years, the first hearings for Sixth Circuit nominees in almost 5 years, the first hearing for a Tenth Circuit nominee in 6 years, and the first hearings for Fourth Circuit nominees in 4 years.

We have reformed the process for considering judicial nominees.

For example, we have ended the practice of anonymous holds that plagued the period of Republican control, when any Republican Senator could hold any nominee from his home State, his own circuit or any part of the country for any reason, or no reason, without any accountability. We have returned to the Democratic tradition of holding regular hearings, rather than going for months without a single hearing.

With a positive vote on the nomination of Lavenski Smith, the Senate will have confirmed its 10th Court of Appeals nominee of President Bush since the reorganization of the Senate Judiciary Committee a year ago, on July 10, 2001. During their recent 6½ years of majority control, Republicans averaged seven Court of Appeals confirmations a year.

The Democratic-led Judiciary Committee has had a record-breaking first year fairly and promptly considering President Bush’s nominees, which I detailed last Friday. For example, in 1 year, we have held hearings for 78 of the President’s nominees.

That is more hearings for this President’s district and circuit court nominees than in 20 of the past 22 years.

Under Democratic leadership, the Senate confirmed more circuit and district court judges, 57, than were confirmed during all 12 months in each of 2000, 1999, 1997, 1996, and 1995, 5 of the prior 6 years of Republican control of the Senate. The Judiciary Committee has since last July voted on 15 circuit court nominees. In our first year, we held more hearings for more of President Bush’s circuit court nominees than in the first year of any of the past three Presidents.

Each of President Bush’s nominees have also been given committee votes than in the first year of any of the past three Presidents.

Unfortunately, one-sixth of President Clinton’s judicial nominees—more than 50—never got a committee hearing and committee vote from the Republican majority, which perpetuated long-standing vacancies into this year. If the Republicans had not left more than 50 of President Clinton’s nominees without a hearing or a vote, the current number of vacancies might be closer to 40 than 90.

In addition, large numbers of vacancies continue to exist on many Courts of Appeals, in large measure because the recent Republican majority was not willing to hold hearings or vote on more than half—56 percent—of President Clinton’s Courts of Appeals nominees in 1999 and 2000 and was not willing to confirm a single judge to the Circuit Court of Appeals during the entire 1999 session.

From the time the Republicans took majority control of the Senate in 1995 until the reorganization of the Committee last July, circuit vacancies increased from 16 to 33, more than doubling.

Democrats have broken with that recent history of inaction. During our first year in control of the Judiciary Committee, we held 16 hearings for circuit court nominees. That is almost the same number of circuit court nominees, 17, who were never given a Committee vote by Republicans in 2000.

Democrats are working hard to reduce judicial vacancies and we have moved quickly on these nominees, as well as many, many others. I have noted that we could have been even more productive with a little cooperation from the White House, but that has not been forthcoming.

More than 60% of current vacancies, more than half do not have a nominee. We are almost out of district court nominees ready to be included at hearings, because the President has been so slow to nominate district court nominees and insists on delaying the ABA peer review process until after the nominations are made.

Today’s vote on the nomination of Lavenski Smith to the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit is the third Eighth Circuit nominee the committee has considered in the past year. This is in sharp contrast to the treatment of Eighth Circuit nominee Bonnie Campbell by Republicans.

Ms. Campbell is now a partner at the distinguished Washington law firm of Arent Fox Kintner Plotkin & Kahn, where she acts as an adviser, negotiator, advocate, and litigator, representing employers in personnel, labor relations, employment discrimination, benefits, and other employment-related matters. A graduate of Drake University and Drake’s law school, Ms. Campbell has an outstanding record of public service.

She was nominated by President Clinton in June 2000 to serve on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

She was supported by both of her Senators, Democrat Tom Harkin and Republican Chuck Grassley, given a “Qualified” rating by the ABA, and afforded a hearing before the Judiciary Committee a few months later, in May of 2000. However, despite a non-controversial hearing, Ms. Campbell was never scheduled for a committee vote. No explanation for this failure to give her a hearing was ever given. Her nomination was eventually returned at the end of the 106th Congress. Other individuals nominated after Ms. Campbell were given committee hearings and votes and were confirmed later that year, while Ms. Campbell’s nomination languished.

She seems to have been the victim of the Republican practice of anonymous, indefinite holds. In January of 2001, President Clinton re-nominated Ms. Campbell, but President Bush failed to seize the opportunity for bipartisanship, and withdrew her nomination shortly thereafter.

At the time her nomination Ms. Campbell was nearing the end of a distinguished term at the U.S. Department of Justice, where she served as Director of the Violence Against Women Office, a position to which she was appointed by President Clinton in 1996.

In that capacity, she oversaw a $1.6 billion program to provide funding to States to strengthen their efforts in the areas of domestic violence and sexual abuse. She also directed the Federal Capitated Grant Program to implement the new criminal statutes created by the 1994 Violence Against Women Act. Ms. Campbell oversaw the Justice Department’s efforts to combine tough new Federal criminal laws with assistance to States and localities to fight against violence against women.

Bonnie Campbell had, before coming to Washington, served as the Attorney General of Iowa, the first woman ever elected to that position. During her tenure in office, she was instrumental in pushing the State legislature to strengthen Iowa’s domestic abuse statute, and in 1992 she authored one of the Nation’s first anti-stalking laws. In 1997 Bonnie Campbell was named by Time magazine as one of the 25 most influential people in America. Ms. Campbell’s record of distinguished public service and her experience in private practice combined to make an excellent nominee to the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, a point our Committee and the Senate majority obviously agreed. Yet once afforded a hearing, Bonnie Campbell was left to linger in an indefensible limbo. She was not granted a committee vote, but neither was she confronted with any objections to her nomination to the Eighth Circuit proceeding.

Contrasting the treatment of the nominations of Bonnie Campbell and Lavenski Smith to the Eighth Circuit evidences the difference in how the Republican majority and the current Democratic majority have handled judicial nominations and highlights the fairness that has been restored to the confirmation process.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will return to legislative session.

The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Lavenski R. Smith, of Arkansas, to be a Judge of the United States Circuit Court for the Eighth Circuit?

The nomination was confirmed.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. President, I rise to speak about Judge Lavenski Smith who has been confirmed this evening for the eighth circuit court of appeals. This is a great evening for him and his family. He is going to be a great jurist. I congratulate Judge Smith tonight.

I thank President Bush for making an excellent choice, a choice that I think Arkansas can feel good about, the Eighth Circuit can feel good about, and, indeed, the country can feel good about. Judge Smith is an excellent choice. He is the first African American to represent the State of Arkansas in the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals. He will do so with great distinction.

I will speak, very briefly, about his career. But the hallmark of Judge Smith’s entire career has been one of service. It has been a storybook tale. He is a native of Hope, AR. He earned both his bachelor’s degree and his law degree from the University of Arkansas. He clerked his way through college. Following law school, he clerked for 3 years, and then he served the poorest citizens of Arkansas as the staff attorney for Ozark Legal Services, representing abused and neglected children.

After working with Ozark Legal Services, he opened the first minority-owned firm in Springdale, AR, handling primarily civil cases. He then taught business law at John Brown University and served several years in public service, including Regulatory Liaison for Governor Huckabee. Currently Judge Smith serves as the commissioner of the Arkansas Public Service Commission.

In 1999, he was appointed to the Arkansas supreme court and served on the Arkansas supreme court with distinction for 2 years. As a supreme court justice, he presided over hundreds of cases and authored several opinions. He was highly praised by all his colleagues in the Arkansas supreme court.

In June of 2001, the American Bar Association reviewed Justice Smith’s qualifications and made a “unanimous qualified” determination.

Beyond all of his obvious legal qualifications, I want to point out that he has had a long history of community service. Whether it was as a board member of the Northwest Arkansas Children’s Justice Center, a nonprofit organization dedicated to providing mediation and conciliation services, working with the Partners for Family Training, a group that recruits and trains foster parents, or whether it was raising funds for the School of Hope, a school for handicapped children in Hope, AR, at every stage of his life there has been this hallmark of service.

This outstanding record of service is the most outwardly visible sign of something the people in Arkansas know well: that he is an honorable man who will serve his country well. We can all be proud of the vote that occurred this evening.

S6796 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE July 15, 2002
It is a storybook tale, but it is a storybook tale that has not yet had the last chapters written. There are going to be a lot of wonderful chapters in the years ahead as he, as a young man, has a long time to serve on the Federal bench.

It will be a wonderful culmination to what has already been a great story and a great career. I stand with Arkansas this evening in pride.

I thank Senator Blanche Lincoln for her cooperation, for her support, and all that she has done over the last year to make tonight’s vote possible.

With that, Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Arkansas for those kind words.

I rise to express my gratitude to all of my colleagues tonight for their support of the cloture motion before the Senate this evening of the nomination of Judge Lavinski Smith of Arkansas to fill a vacancy on the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals. I am certainly pleased that the majority leader has taken a step which demonstrates a commitment of the Democratic leadership in the Senate to move the nomination process forward and to fulfill our obligation under the Constitution.

As one of those who signed the cloture motion to bring forward Judge Smith’s nomination, I am proud of my colleagues for joining in with an excellent vote in supporting this fine Arkansan to the bench.

I want to say a special thanks to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee for his hard work over the last year to reduce the number of judicial vacancies which will ensure our Federal courts can operate efficiently. He has tirelessly worked in the Judiciary Committee to be fair and to expedite the process forward.

There has certainly been a good deal of heated debate surrounding the pace of judicial confirmations in recent months. However, I can say from personal experience that the chairman has been highly responsive to my inquiries regarding this nomination. I am grateful for his efforts and those of the committee staff in trying to move the process forward expeditiously.

I also thank my colleague, Senator Hutchinson from Arkansas, for his work in helping to bring this matter to the floor.

For the benefit of my colleagues who are not familiar with Judge Smith, I am pleased to offer a few words of introduction.

As my colleague from Arkansas mentioned, Lavinski Smith is a lifelong resident of Hope, Arkansas, as many people from Arkansas have been recognized being from Hope. After graduating from high school, Judge Smith moved north to Fayetteville, where he received a BA and JD from the University of Arkansas in Fayetteville.

Since that time, Judge Smith has enjoyed an impressive career as a practicing attorney, as my colleague mentioned, with great service through the legal services to the indigent, a State supreme court judge, a professor, and, most recently, a member of the Arkansas Public Service Commission.

This wondrous list of accomplishments for anyone, but at the age of 43, Judge Smith’s record is a good indication that he has many years of productive service in his future.

Since President Bush announced the appointment of Judge Smith last year, I have heard from dozens of Arkansans across the political spectrum who support his nomination. In fact, my support for Judge Smith’s nomination is based in large part on the enthusiastic endorsement he has received from those who know him the best: his colleagues and friends who have firsthand knowledge of his professional and personal attributes, those who have worked with him in the legal field who have sent their recommendations to me.

Those who have indicated strong support for Judge Smith in Arkansas include Arkansas supreme court chief justice “Dub” Arnold and Arkansas NAACP president Dale Charles. In addition, it is important to note that Judge Smith received a unanimous “qualified” rating for this position by the ABA Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary.

Even though Judge Smith and I may not agree on every issue, that is not the test I apply to determine an individual’s fitness for the Federal judiciary. I evaluate judicial nominees based on skill, experience, and ability to understand and apply established precedent, not on any one particular point of view a nominee may hold. Fundamentally, I am interested in knowing that a nominee can fulfill his responsibility under the Constitution in a court of law.

I am satisfied that Judge Smith has met that standard, and I, therefore, thank my colleagues for supporting his nomination and the cloture motion to move that forward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. I thank all of my colleagues for the tremendous work done in the past week. I especially compliment the distinguished Senator from Maryland, the chairman of the Banking Committee, for the extraordinary leadership he has shown in getting us to this point. I am sure there were few who have ever guessed this could have passed so overwhelmingly as it did tonight.

That is the accounting legislation. I am very grateful to all who had a significant role to play. I thank the staff of the Banking Committee and so many of my colleagues. I also acknowledge the fine work done by Senator Leahy on the enforcement aspects of this legislation.

The combination of the contribution made by the Judiciary Committee, along with the Banking Committee, makes this a historic moment for the Senate, a historic moment for corporate governance, and a real recognition that at long last we are going to be rebuilding the confidence and trust we need in our free enterprise system.

We made a contribution in that regard today. I am very hopeful we can get this work done very soon.

It would be my hope, given the President’s support for the Sarbanes bill, and Speaker Hastert’s support, as he indicated just last week, that the House consider taking up the Sarbanes bill and passing it free-standing so we could send it directly to the President in time to afford the President the opportunity to sign it very quickly. That would be the quickest way, and given the broad bipartisan support this legislation now enjoys, and given Speaker Hastert’s support for the legislation, I would think this would be a tremendous opportunity to demonstrate in a bipartisan way how we can respond as we did today. But more than how quickly, how effectively we can respond to the needs of our Nation when it comes to restoring that confidence.

GREATER ACCESS TO AFFORDABLE PHARMACEUTICALS ACT OF 2001—Motion To Proceed

Mr. DASCHLE. Having disposed of the banking legislation, it is now our intent to turn to the whole issue of prescription drugs. We will deal with both cost containment as well as Medicare benefits. The bill passed out of the Labor Committee, S. 812, Calendar No. 491, will be the vehicle for our debate. It is my intention now to ask unanimous consent the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 491, S. 812, to provide greater access to affordable pharmaceuticals at 10:30 a.m., Tuesday, July 16.

Mr. GREGG. This bill was reported out of the committee on which I am ranking member. At the time it was reported out, which was last Thursday—so it has been a very quick turnaround and no report has been filed on the bill—there was an understanding within the committee that there would be two issues resolved before it came to the floor. One involved bioequivalency and the other involved the 45-day rule.

There are other issues with the bill. Those other issues may require further work, but those two issues need to be resolved before this bill comes to the floor. As I believe was the understanding when the bill was passed out of committee, it would be passed with those being resolved before it got to the floor.

I understand it is being moved to the floor quickly to be the vehicle addressing the other issues involved in drug coverage.

The bill itself has some very strong points in it; I have drafted a fair amount of it so I recognize that. But at this time I have to object to the motion to proceed.
Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, in regard to the language to which the Senator has referred on the question of the bioequivalence, a whole new section was added, subsection (C) of section 7, dealing with bioequivalency. It was sent out to the good Senator on Thursday evening.

We had indicated if we did not hear back from the Senator or his staff, we would assume that language reflected what was discussed in the course of the markup. We had similar kinds of clarifications with regard to certain procedures and filings.

As far as we are concerned, at least on our side, these particular provisions have been dealt with in the legislation and we are prepared to move ahead with the consideration.

This is extraordinarily important legislation. It relates to not only the quality of prescription drugs but accessibility and affordability of prescription drugs. We are seeing today the significant abuses of the Hatch-Waxman legislation. If we were able to just go back to the full intent of Hatch-Waxman, conforming with that, this legislation would not be necessary. But it is necessary.

The best estimate is it would save consumers $71 billion over the period of 10 years. It is very important. We ought to be about it. I hope we can get to the legislation and start debating it.

We had a strong bipartisan vote in the committee, and we are ready to go and consider amendments. If there is further clarification that is necessary, we are glad to consider it, but I regret very much we are going to have to delay legislation which is as important as this to our seniors as well as to other Americans who believe they need to be able to get fairness in the consideration of generic drugs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. GREGG. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DASCHLE. I think I retain the floor. I will be happy to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GREGG. Yes. That is why I was asking.

The question is this—rhetorical in nature. Unfortunately, in order to reach an agreement, you have to have both sides agree. Senator Feingold, who is concerned about the bioequivalency, has not agreed to the language. I have not agreed to the 45-day language. I am sure it could be worked out, and worked out rather promptly, so we would not have to go through the exercise of delaying this bill, and I would be happy to work with the Majority Leader. But until the language is worked out that issue, I have to reserve my rights and object to the proceeding.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I have no choice, of course, but to move to proceed to Calendar No. 49. I send a cloture motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, do hereby move to bring to a close the debate on the motion to proceed to Calendar No. 49, S. 812, the Greater Access to Affordable Pharmaceuticals Act of 2001:

Senators Harry Reid, Jon Corzine, Byron L. Dorgan, Ron Wyden, Maria Cantwell, Paul Sarbanes, Debbie Stabenow, Dick Durbin, Thomas Carper, Tom Daschle, Jack Reed, Daniel K. Akaka, Kent Conrad, Ernest Hollings, and Hillary Clinton.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senators Lincoln and Hutchinson have the opportunity to speak for up to 8 minutes each with respect to the Smith nomination, to appear at the appropriate place in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I will include in this part of the RECORD the sections relating to the bioequivalence. It is on page 53. The effect of the section is:

This section shall not be construed to alter the authority of the Secretary of Health and Human Services to regulate biological products under the Food, Drug, and Cosmetics Act. Any such authority shall be exercised under that Act as in effect on the day before the day of enactment of this Act.

Effectively, we are restating the current law.

I will also have printed in the RECORD the language which was discussion earlier—indeed, an explanation and how it conformed with what we had agreed to in terms of the exchange.

If it is necessary, we will be glad to work with our friends and colleagues on the other side during the remainder of the evening and certainly tomorrow to try to find out, if this language is not satisfactory, what language would be satisfactory.

We did have areas of differences, but not with regard to these two particular provisions. There was an agreement on it. It was just trying to find the appropriate language which would reflect the opinion of the committee. We believed we had done so, and we are glad to work with our colleagues on the other side. If that is not the case, we are glad to make those adjustments and changes so we can begin the debate on this extremely important piece of legislation.

We recognized when this was introduced—and I give great respect to my friends and colleagues Senator Breaux and Senator McCaIN, for developing the basic legislation which was the core of the debate we had in our committee—it was modified to try to respond to some of those who had some concerns. We had Senator Edwards and Senator Collins in a bipartisan way develop an approach which had strong bipartisan support. We had good discussion and debate in our committee on this matter and a strong committee outcome.

This is a very important piece of legislation. It is one which deals, not so much with the availability and the accessibility of drugs but as to the question of whether they are going to be reasonably affordable alternatives to brand name drugs and whether we are going to follow the agreement that was made at the time of the Hatch-Waxman legislation, which was enacted, which really was based upon the idea that we would have new breakthrough drugs rather than rehashing of older drugs.

What we have seen is in recent times those who have the patents are using the Hatch-Waxman legislation in ways that work to the advantage of the patent holders, not to the advantage of the consumers in this country. It is to change those abuses that this legislation has been developed. It is very important. We will continue to work with our colleagues to try to clarify any of the language that needs to be clarified. We look forward to the debate at the earliest possible time.

I thank the majority leader for giving the attention and priority that he has to this legislation. I think for most of us, as we travel around to our constituencies, we find that availability, the accessibility, and the cost of prescription drugs are on the minds of just about every family in this country.
You don’t have to be sick, although that is certainly something that every person who is ill understands very well. But it is the total family. So much of the challenge and the burden of health care costs goes to all the members of the family as they are trying to meet those costs.

As we are particularly in the period of what I consider to be the life-science century where we have enormous opportunities for major breakthroughs and extraordinary kinds of positive impact on the lives of people in this country, we must make sure these prescription drugs and the generics are going to be available and accessible. The faster that we have a chance to engage in this debate and pass this legislation, the better the health of the American people is going to be.

I note on the floor the prime sponsor, the Senator from New York, Mr. Schumer. He has probably heard that there was objection to taking up this legislation because of certain language clarification that we reviewed and put in the Record clarifications which, quite frankly, conform to the issues that were raised. They are not areas of difference but areas of clarification. We sent those to our colleagues last Thursday night indicating that we understand they would be satisfactory unless we heard back. We did not hear back until just minutes ago.

We want to work with our colleagues. We certainly invite the Senator who has brought such strong force on this issue. We hope that overnight and certainly in the early morning we could have a clarification which would remove the reasons for not proceeding; that at some time tomorrow we could begin the debate in full and move ahead to considering this legislation.

Mr. Schumer, will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. Kennedy. Yes.

Mr. Schumer. I thank my colleague from Massachusetts who has been such a great leader on this issue, I guess, as I understand it, our friend from New Hampshire has objected to moving forward.

We have spent a very long time talking about this issue—of course the issue of availability of drugs, and of course the issue of the cost of drugs but even the specifics of the generic drugs.

We had extensive hearings on this bill 12 weeks ago or 8 weeks ago. There has been a great deal of discussion. This is not a last minute something that someone wrote on the back of an envelope and said here, take it. There has been tremendous discussion on this issue. There are differences of opinion. That is fair. That is legitimate. That is why we have a Senate.

But to prevent the bill from moving forward when the cost of drugs goes through the roof, when the people are clamoring for us to bring down those costs and when the people have passed in a very bipartisan way in Senator Kennedy’s committee, it just strikes me as missing the forest for the trees—the forest being the great need to do something and the trees being the details that we should be debating on the floor in order to make the right decision.

I will just say to my colleague that I am as disappointed as he is—maybe not as upset as he is. I work harder than he does on bringing these issues to the floor, but almost as much.

Is this something that is brand new? Where do these objections come from? These are issues that we have discussed and agreed on. It is my understanding that the Senator from New Hampshire simply didn’t have the votes when he decided not to bring forward his amendments when the committee marked up.

Is that a correct or an unfair characterization?

Mr. Kennedy. The reason the Senator objects is in behalf of the Senator from Tennessee who wanted clarification in terms of the ability of the FDA to regulate biological products. We have included a new section on page 52. This section shall not be construed to alter the authority of the Secretary to regulate biological products under the FDA act. So we added that just for clarification.

It is difficult for me to understand why that doesn’t work.

Mr. Hutchinson. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. Kennedy. I will in just a moment.

Then there was another question with regard to the timing and procedures to be able to bring civil action. We added on page 55 a new section for the Senator from New Hampshire.

As I mentioned earlier, we don’t have a difference. We would be glad to work through the evening, if we had the opportunity to proceed to this on tomorrow.

If this language isn’t clear—we are not facing a difference on it. What I am troubled by is the fact that there is objection to moving to the legislation and moving to it in a timely way when it is legislation which is of such importance and relevance to every family in this country.

I see my friend from Michigan on the floor, but I will yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. Hutchinson. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts. I pose the question because as a member of the committee and someone who was very glad to join, because I am a bipartisan vote for the legislation, it was my clear understanding as we came to that decision vote that a point was reached in working out the two outstanding issues which Senator Gregg mentioned in his objection. There is no desire on any body of the legislation down. But it was with the understanding that there would be that agreement.

While it seems the issues are relatively minor and that can be done in a very expeditious way, the fact is that Senator Frist and Senator Gregg have not yet signed off on that language.

So I can’t stand here and listen to my colleague being characterized as obstructing the progress of this legislation when in fact they want to honor the agreement that was made at the time that bipartisan vote took place.

But it is the challenge if they do have a recollection of the vote that occurred.

Mr. Kennedy. No. The Senator has not understood correctly. I will stand by the record. There was never a conditioning of reporting this out for an agreement. I have been either chairman or ranking member for some period of time. I know those words are stated. But there was never a conditioning of reporting out based upon getting agreement. I would not have accepted that. This is too important. There was not a difference.

You will find that the language we have included with regard to biologics basically is a restatement of what Senator Frist said. If it isn’t, I am glad to make that kind of adjustment. What we did say—as we say in virtually the passage of all legislation—is that we will authorize technical corrections to be made by the staff.

If you have an agreement in principle, you do not have a difference. We have an agreement in principle.

If this language isn’t carried forward—and it is language which I believe should be—give us the language, and we will work on it tonight. But I think to delay something that is as important as this is not justified. This subject matter is too important to families in my State, as I am sure it is in Arkansas. That is why I am surprised the Senator from Arkansas is standing with the Senator from New Hampshire and urging delay of this legislation, because it is of such importance. I welcome the fact that he supported it, but we want to get on with this legislation. And I think the sooner we can get on it, the better.

Senator, if you used to work with us and be the agent for the other Senators and work through the evening, we would welcome his intervention in doing that because we want to get on it.

I would be glad to yield to the Senator from Arkansas. Then I would be glad to yield the floor and let the Senator speak.

Ms. Stabenow. I thank you the Senator.

We commend our chairman, Senator Kennedy, for his work in bringing this important bill to the floor. I also commend Senator Schumer for his leadership.

I say to my friend from Massachusetts, it is my understanding the leader, because of the importance of the issue of not only lowering drug prices for everyone but providing Medicare coverage for prescription drugs, has actually allocated up to 2 weeks on this subject. I would assume we would have ample opportunity to work through any issues and problems that colleagues would have on the other side of the aisle.
But the clock is ticking on the 2 weeks. The sooner we can get to the bill, the sooner we can begin to move through a number of different amendments to be able to get this bill in good shape, to be able to deal with a number of issues, such as those that deal with increased availability and providing Medicare coverage, and so on.

This is so critical that our leader has, in fact, allocated 2 weeks. So I am very surprised that our colleague from New Hampshire would stop even the beginning of the debate when he knows that it is not a 1-day debate. We are talking about having 2 weeks and as many hours as it takes in that time to be able to work out all of the kinks and to be able to get it right.

I know, coming from Michigan today, working and being in Battle Creek at a senior center and in Kalamazoo at a senior center, that they are watching us very closely. We have had a lot of talk, and if talk bought medicine, people would be buying a lot of medicine. But when I hear the first thing done is to talk, and it is complicated. We know that.

It is time to act. I commend the chairman of the committee for acting. I am looking forward to working with him.

Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. President, I will yield the floor in just a moment. I want to be very clear on the RECORD; that is, that the language was provided both to Senator FRIST and Senator GREGG on Thursday afternoon at around 4:15. The first I have heard thereon was the objection to it 5 minutes before the majority leader’s request. I did not hear any objection to it Friday. There was not any objection to it Saturday. There had been no objection to it Monday, today.

It seems to me that if there are objections to it, we ought to be able to clarify the language and move forward. If people have objections to this legislation, let’s hear it. Let’s debate it.

I pay special tribute to Senator SABINOw and Mr. McCaIN. Seniors have been paying too high a price for too long. This is going to make a difference. We have delayed too long in dealing with the issue of prescription drugs.

I hope we can all come together and work out whatever differences they may have found from the committee, a bill that passed out in a bipartisan way, but work those details out, hopefully tonight, so maybe we can bring forward, without having to go through the unusual procedural cloture motion to bring something up, that we can begin the debate in earnest and begin to honestly look at the ways we can help the seniors of the Nation.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

ACCOUNTING REFORM

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I wish to address the body on an issue of some significant importance to the country. First, good business was done by the Senate today dealing with the accounting situation, the financial mistrust crisis that we have going on in our country with some of the heads of corporations. I think we have taken a positive step on dealing with that problem.

NORTH KOREA

Mr. BROWNBACK. I want to address the body quickly and briefly but importantly on what is happening in North Korea and to North Korean refugees coming out of that country.

Prior to the July 4th recess, my colleagues, Senator KENNEDY and Senator ALLEN, and I brought to light the plight of thousands of Korean Americans and the painful secret shared by hundreds of thousands of Koreans to the outside world. These NGO's have in the last year and a half seen a significant increase in the number of North Korean refugees in China.

It was not until the showing of a dramatic video of five members of the Han-mee family being forcibly removed from the Japanese consulate in Beijing that the world began to pay attention. Since then, several other asylum bids have drawn the attention of mainstream news. But only by verifying the story of baby killings and rising abuse in North Korean prison camps reported in the New York Times and based on the testimony of Ms. Soon Ok Lee, who, as I indicated before, testified at our hearing.

In June 2002, ABC Nightline broad-cast a three-part documentary of the North Korean refugee in China by Ms. Kim Jung-eun whose schedule did not permit her to testify before our committee. I was told by ABC News staff that thousands of Americans have responded to the broadcast with e-mails in disbelief and in rage against the North Korean regime. I understand that the three programs drew high response from viewers.

It is estimated that between 2 to 3 million people died of starvation and persecution in North Korea from 1995 through 1998 and that up to up to 300,000 North Korean refugees in China are living a precarious and dangerous existence in the wild, in the hope of avoiding an effort to avoid being captured and repatriated back to North Korea by Chinese and North Korean agents clandestinely operating inside China.

Of the 300,000 refugees, only 518 refugees such as my friend, the Han-mee family, were able to take refuge at foreign missions in Beijing and in Shenyang, China.

These actions by the Chinese are simply unacceptable, not only to basic principles and tenets of international human rights, but also by the fact that China a signatory of the International Refugees Convention. Hundreds of South Korean, Japanese and others are working inside China to help the refugees, risking their lives and capture by the Chinese police. A German doctor who also testified before our committee worked in North Korea for a year and a half but was evicted by the North Korean regime in all its complexity.

In addition, Mr. President, I urged Secretary Powell in both a formal consultation and by correspondence on the need of our Department of State to allow the processing of North Korean refugees together with the Chinese government and the Beijing office of the United Nations High Commissioner on Refugees.

The plight of North Korean refugees, of course, is merely a symptom of a far more pressing issue--how to deal with one of the most repressive and totalitarian regimes in the world, the isolated country of North Korea ruled by one man, Kim Jong-il.

Although news regarding the efforts of many in the NGO community and countless others working in North East Asia have been slowly filtering into the West, the truth of the North Korean regime is largely hidden and inaccessible.

It is not possible to know that report that food aid from South Korea, the U.S., and Japan, simply are not reaching the dying people. As I mentioned in a previous statement, I believe it is absolutely necessary to condition stringent monitoring of the food distribution in order to determine if food aid is being distributed appropriately. Much of this aid is apparently being diverted to feed the million-plus North Korean army and to reward the elites and the inner circle around Kim Jong-il in Pyongyang. For this reason, many well-respected NGOs, including Doctors Without Borders have withdrawn from North Korea.

More troubling is that these NGO's have confirmed reports of more than a dozen prison camps in North Korea, where the prisoners are starved, forced to work at hard labor, and tortured to death.

Aside from the troubling refugee issue, we cannot forget that North Korea is a threat to regional and global security. North Korea continues its procurement of materials and components for its ballistic missile programs from foreign sources, especially through North Korean firms based in China. In addition, North Korea has become a "secondary supplier" of missile technology and expertise to several countries in the Middle East, South Asia and North Africa. The CIA's 2001 report reassesses that North Korea is capable of producing and delivering via missile warheads or other munitions a variety of chemical agents and possibly some biological.

Furthermore, North Korea refuses to carry out its obligations under the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty, NPT and the 1994 Agreed Framework. Initial IAEA, International Atomic Energy Agency, inspections and intelligence reports in the early 1990s triggered concern regarding a clandestine nuclear weapons program. U.S. and foreign intelligence have concluded that the DPRK government of North Korea probably has sufficient plutonium for 1 to 5 nuclear weapons. Despite its obligations under the NPT and the Agreed Framework, North Korea continues to refuse inspections.

So while it would be reason enough to continue our pressure on North Korea and China for the humanitarian violations alone, the pressing security threats that the current North Korean government poses to U.S. interests which must be dealt with. While refugee and nuclear weapons issues will necessitate very different responses—the thing they share in common is the alarms they raise about ignoring the North Korean problem in all its complexity.

While I am mindful of the diplomatic sensitivities regarding the need to reach out to the North Korean regime, it is my hope that we have to confront the truth and tell the truth. Moreover, reconciliation efforts have yet to yield any results. There was much hope after the historic meeting between President Kim Dae Jung and Jong-il in June 2000, that such a gesture would bring about some meaningful change.

As the naval skirmish last month and the ongoing problems with the North Korean refugees show, the North Korean issue has simply worsened. It’s time for the North Korean regime to immediately allow international monitoring of food aid into the country and to work with the international NGO community to alleviate the suffering of its people. That may at least stem the tide of refugees crossing over into China and being prey to human traffickers and other difficulties faced by refugees. But more fundamentally, the North regime itself must begin to change itself and join the rest of the world in giving hope and freedom to its people.

The U.S. can not afford to give into the slow-walking of reforms in North Korea. For the stability of the region and for the sake of basic human rights—North Korea must remain a top policy focus for U.S. foreign policy. We must keep clear and constant pressure on NK and neighboring countries to bring new leadership into being. This is a daunting task, but one that we can not afford to shirk.

We have significant refugee flight taking place out of North Korea. We have significant flight of humanitarian aid, too. The new and emerging Committee on Immigration on this particular topic. We have a humanitarian crisis, probably the largest in the world, that is taking place. We estimate that there are between 2 to 3 million people who have died of starvation and persecution in North Korea from 1995 to 1998, in a 3-year time period—2 to 3 million people. Nobody knows for sure because outside observers are not allowed.

This Nation is the most repressive, closed country in the world today. The world community is feeding those who are left in North Korea. The United States and a number of other donating countries are feeding about half of the population in North Korea. Much of the food aid we are giving North Korea is not getting out to where it is needed. It is still held by the leadership in that country.

We estimate that some 300,000 North Korean refugees are living in China today, that 300,000 refugees have successfully defected, gotten out of China and into South Korea or into another third country—that is this year, through June of 2002. Many of them have done it by taking refugee status at foreign missions in Beijing and Shenyang, China. They have rushed embassies in those communities, gotten inside, asked for political asylum, it has been granted, and they passed to South Korea, generally through a third country—many times through the Philippines. I say only 518 between this year and history of 50 years ago—there have been only several thousand who have defected from North Korea into South Korea. Generally, each year, it has been a trickle—maybe 500, maybe 1000. But, more fundamentally, the North Korean regime has been able to keep people in a dogmatic system, saying this regime is the best in the world and saying they are being fed by the President and the leadership. Now that trickle is beginning to really move. They believe it may be up to a thousand; there may be a thousand or more defecting this year alone, which is a massive number considering the history.

Mr. President, the issue I want to bring to light is the role of China and the importance of China in allowing these people to live. If China will allow these people to pass through, or if China will allow the U.N. Commission, or the High Commission on Refugees to establish a processing center to determine if these are people who need to be allowed to pass into third countries, thousands if not millions of people will not have to live in North Korea. If China does not, you are going to see thousands, possibly millions more, die of starvation, persecution, and other causes.

China has a choice. They will choose what the status is going to be, whether these people will live or die. They need to be confronted directly and asked to let these people live, to let them pass through. Let them pass through to Mongolia, to South Korea, to other places; but don’t send them back. If China does not, you are going to see thousands, possibly millions more, die of starvation, persecution, and other causes.

If China does not, you are going to see thousands, possibly millions more, die of starvation, persecution, and other causes.

North Korea is a country that is difficult for us or anybody else in the world to influence. China is the only country in the world that has some influence with the North Korean leadership. So it is going to be their choice as to whether these people will live or die.

North Korea needs to change its regime. I don’t need to remind Members of the Senate of the other problems we have with North Korea. They are a supplier of weapons. North Korea has become a secondary supplier of missile technology and expertise to several countries in the Middle East, South Asia, and North Africa. The CIA’s 2001 report notes that North Korea is capable of producing and deploying via missile warheads, or other munitions, a variety of chemical agents and possibly some biological agents as well.

Mr. President, I draw this to the attention of my colleagues because we need to allow refugees to pass and come into the United States as well. We will be bringing this issue up again in front of this body. I hope we will put pressure on China, which doesn’t have a history of acting in a way that they can act to save people’s lives—if they will only allow these people to pass through.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

PRESCRIPTION DRUG COVERAGE FOR SENIORS

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I am very hopeful the Senate will be able to get on the issue of prescription drug coverage very soon. This is an urgent issue for seniors and the people of this country. I want to spend a few minutes tonight talking about why this is so important and what I think the real challenge is to the Senate in the next couple of weeks.

Mr. President, for the last quarter of the 20th century, the standard Government line on prescription drugs for older people was a little bit like the marquee of the big, old-fashioned theaters you would see downtown. The marque sign was all lit up and it always read: “Coming soon.” But, for seniors, that “soon” just never seemed to arrive.

Many seniors asked then, just as they do now at our town meetings, if anybody in Washington is ever going to provide some real help in paying for prescription medicines.

I am very pleased that Senator Durbin has made this a priority issue for the Senate. He has made it very clear to me that he is willing to work with anybody in the Senate to finally get this job done and to get it done right.

I think we know what this issue is all about for seniors, and that is the cost of medicine and coverage for medicine. In effect, cost and coverage really go hand in hand because if you are able to get seniors coverage, but you have not held down the costs, you are not getting a whole lot for the Government’s money. Of course, if you take steps to control costs, but many seniors still don’t have the ability to meet even those costs, we will continue to have more and more older people fall between the cracks.

So it is important that the Senate addresses both of these issues and addresses them right. I want to talk for a few minutes about what I think some of the key components are first of holding down costs. First, I think it is important that it be done with bargaining power in the private sector. In discussing this—and we will do this over the next couple of weeks—I want to describe what I was involved in back in the 1970s when I was co-director of the Oregon Gray Panthers.

I remember one rainy night standing with a swarm of seniors around a labor union office. It was barely bigger than a pill box. We were kicking off a program that night where seniors, through labor unions and others in the community, had been able to bargain with pharmaceutical concerns, and seniors were able to get their drugs at cost, plus a small monthly fee. As I worked for the company, it worked for the seniors.

The community pulled together, and in this little pharmacy, which I have said was really no bigger than a pill box, we saw that you could set up bargaining power right in the private sector. I think tonight, how many more older people in this country need the benefits of bargaining power today? So I am very hopeful that on this question of bargaining, a movement we focus on bargaining power.

Senator DASCHLE made it clear that it is a priority to him. He will work with all our colleagues to make sure that is in a final bill and that we rememorize this country that what happened in Eugene, OR, is a priority to him. He will work with pharmaceutical concerns, and seniors, who have worked so hard on this over the next couple of weeks, have one principal challenge as we try to pass a comprehensive bill and then have it go to discussions with our colleagues in the House, and that is to make it clear to the country that this is a real effort to help seniors and help all Americans.

I want to make it clear that, in my opinion, the Congress cannot afford not to cover senior citizens, and I want to give a short example of why this is so urgently needed.

Not too long ago, a physician in Hillsboro, OR, in the metropolitan area surrounding Portland, wrote to me that he put a senior citizen in a hospital for a 6-week course of antibiotics because it was the only way the patient could afford the treatment.

Of course, when the senior goes into the hospital, Medicare Part A, which covers institutional services, picks up the bill, no questions asked. The check gets written by the program to cover the facility in the hospital. Of course, that same condition could have been treated under Medicare Part B, the outpatient portion of Medicare. Our as-

That is why private sector bargaining power is so urgent. The Senate is the only way the patient could afford the treatment.

I believe the Congress got it right in that Hatch-Waxman legislation and that the legislation we will be consid-

We may try to refine it, and I am certainly open to that, but I think it will continue that crucial balance that was put together in the historic Hatch-Waxman legislation of helping to maintain that bargaining power. We saw that once again.

The model that will be used in the legislation Senator GRAHAM and Senaotor MILLER have drafted incorporated much of what I and Senator SNOWE have been concerned about, and that is to make sure that bargaining power is structured in the private sector, that costs are not shifted to millions of other Americans. There is no Senator who wants, in the effort to come up with a prescription drug proposal for seniors, to end up shifting costs on to those children and grandchildren. That is why private sector bargaining power, something about which I and Senator SNOWE have felt strongly, and Senator DASCHLE has graciously worked with us on, is included in what the Senate is going to have a chance to vote for.

There are some of the key questions. I will wrap up by way of saying that as we move into this discussion over the next couple of weeks, we have one principal challenge as we try to pass a comprehensive bill and then have it go to discussions with our colleagues in the House, and that is to make it clear to the country that this is a real effort to help seniors and help all Americans.
MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to a period for morning business, with Senators allowed to speak therein for a period not to exceed 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

IN MEMORY OF LEW WASSERMAN

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, this is not a happy day for America. On this day occurs a memorial service for Lew Wasserman, who died in his 89th year. He is one of the two giants of the American free enterprise system who for over 60 years helped shape and build one of America’s greatest export trade prizes and an extraordinary engine of economic and creative growth: The American film industry. He was a pioneer of great intellect and innovation. He could see what others could not, for he had the gift of vision, both rare and valuable.

He was more than that. He was a patriot in a shining sense of that word. He believed in the country and all who live in it. He believed in the American free market system. He was appalled at the behavior of those executives who knowingly soiled the honor and integrity of that system.

He and his wife, Edie, believed in young people and lavished millions of dollars in scholarships on them at a dozen universities on a continuing basis. His heart and his purse went without hesitation to the Motion Picture Home and Hospital, giving it millions of dollars so that those in the movie industry, hard-working craftsmen, artisans, and creators, when they became old and sick, could be cared for.

More millions were conferred anonymously. Lew never sought the spotlight because fame was not his goal nor publicity his guide. He had an old-fashioned view about loyalty. He never turned his back on a friend nor did he ever break his word once given to an individual, to a cause, to his country. Those who worked with him revered him because he never considered himself their leader but, rather, one who served his employees and their company.

There are many in this Congress today who can bear personal witness to his commitment to be of service to the Nation. He was the personal friend of Presidents from John Kennedy, Lyndon Johnson, to Bill Clinton. I daresay if God granted him the time, he would have known and served George W. Bush. To me, personally, he was invaluable. I am dejected. I am saddened.

He shunned tributes, but he was proud of the Presidential Medal of Freedom bestowed on him by President Clinton. If he had not just bought Universal Studios, he would have accepted the Cabinet post offered to him by President Johnson. He is truly one of those unique human beings whose like is seldom found, which is why his loss is so profound to this Nation. I miss him. I thank him for being my friend. And I wish his family Godspeed during these difficult times.

I yield the floor.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, on June 3, our Nation lost one of its finest citizens. Lew Wasserman, long time president and chairman of MCA and friend of Presidents, died at the age of 89.

Lew came from humble roots, but never forgot those less fortunate than he. An entertainment industry visionary and modern day mogul, Lew Wasserman, along with his wonderful wife, Edie, used their position and resources to support hospitals and cultural institutions; to provide scholarships to young people; to fund research to prevent blindness; and to support political candidates in whose leadership they believed. In a rough and tumble industry, he believed in fairness and thoughtfulness, and he cared passionately about our political system and democratic ideals.

Lew Wasserman was a mentor and role model to an entire industry and a great friend to Presidents of both parties, including my husband. I was honored that he was my friend; but, even more than that, I was grateful for his many contributions to America.

On September 29, 1995, my husband awarded Lew Wasserman the Presidential Medal of Freedom. In his remarks, the President said:

"I have met a lot of philanthropists and successful people in my life. I don’t know that I ever met anybody that more consistently every day looked for another opportunity to do something for somebody else, to give somebody else the chance to enjoy the success that he had in life. I thank you, Lew Wasserman."

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY in March of last year. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society. One would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred June 10, 2000, in Albuquerque, NM. A man in a minivan yelling obscenities ran down participants in a gay pride parade. One victim was hit twice in the knees and thrown off the hood. The perpetrator tried to swerve into the crowd three times before police finally pulled him out of the vehicle and arrested him.

I believe that government’s first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.

Mr. SARRANES. Mr. President, I rise to note the release on July 15, 2002 of the first annual report of the U.S.- China Security Review Commission.

Shortly after the enactment in the year 2000 of legislation giving China Permanent Normal Trade Relations, PNTR, the Congress, thanks to the leadership of Senator ROBERT C. BYRD, passed legislation creating the U.S.- China Security Review Commission. According to the law that established the Commission, its purpose is to monitor, investigate and report to the Congress on the national security implications of the bilateral trade and economic relationship between the United States and the People’s Republic of China. The legislation which created the Commission charges it to submit an annual report to the Congress with recommendations for action, if any.

The bi-partisan Commission is composed of twelve commissioners, three of whom were appointed by each of the Congressional leaders in both the House and Senate. To prepare itself to issue its first Report the Commission held public hearings and took testimony from 115 witnesses on 35 separate panels. It also contracted for new research on China from a variety of sources including extensive translation and analysis of articles on economic, political, and trade issues that are appearing in influential Chinese publications. Members of the Commission also traveled to China, Taiwan, Japan, and the headquarters of the World Trade Organization, WTO, in Geneva. During its deliberations the Commission developed an agreement on the issues it was charged by Congress to study, and it adopted its first report by a vote of 11–1.

Among its key findings are that the United States, by acting as China’s largest customer and a key investor in the Chinese economy, has been a major contributor to China’s rise as an economic power. It further notes that our trade relationship with China is not only our largest trade deficit in absolute terms, but also in a majority of our exports, U.S. represents only two percent of our total exports. It finds that the U.S. trade deficit with China.”

The Report further notes that while U.S. imports from China constitute over 40 percent of China’s exports, U.S. exports to China represent only two percent of our total exports. It finds that the U.S. trade deficit with China is not only in low-skilled labor intensive items, but also in a majority of items found on the Commerce Department’s list of advanced technology products. It further finds that there is plausible evidence that our burgeoning trade deficit with China will worsen regardless of China’s entry into the WTO.

The Report also discusses the fact increasing trade and investment linkages between China and Taiwan which the Commission notes “could ameliorate tensions between the two”, but which are also increasing “U.S. dependence on the items made in China for our computers and other high technology products”.

The Report makes a number of recommendations to better the chances for building a better long-term mutually beneficial economic and political relationship with China. Among these are: 1. That we put in place new programs to build a much wider expertise about China both in our society and among policymakers, and 2. That we take new measures to keep our industrial, scientific, and technological base from being weakened as a result of our economic relations with a China whose government has adopted policies to expand its own base even at our expense.

I think this first Report of the Commission makes a very valuable contribution to our policy deliberations on China. It will be very helpful to the Congress as we examine how to respond to the challenges to our country posed by China’s strengthening economic, military, and political power. We can craft sensible policies if we better understand the perceptions that Chinese leaders have of us and their long-term goals. Judging the Commission’s Report will help us do both.

I salute the Commission’s wisdom in calling for the creation of the Commission and thank all of its Commissioners for the important contributions that their first Report makes to our knowledge of the U.S.-China economic and political relationship. I commend the Report to my fellow Senators.

CLEARING THE AIR IN THE SMOKIES

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, the Great Smoky Mountains National Park is truly the crown jewel of our national park system. With towering mountains, clear streams, and a diversity of wildlife, Tennessee is fortunate to have such a tremendous treasure in our own backyard. During the Senate’s July break, I returned to the Smokies, to once again hike Mt. LeConte, this year with my oldest son, Harrison. Our hike up the Alum Cave trail was exhilarating. We spent the night at LeConte Lodge, watching the sunset, and enjoying the hearty meals and good fellowship of fellow hikers.

My trip to the Smokies this month had another purpose, too. This year, I invited EPA Administrator Christie Whitman to join me in order for her to see first-hand the air quality problem that plagues our beautiful park. Over the coming months, Congress and President Bush’s Administration will work to address this challenge and improve our nation’s air quality. As this process moves forward, I wanted to make sure that the President’s top official responsible for protecting our environment heard directly from park officials and saw for herself the unique challenge facing the Smokies.

As the first EPA Administrator to ever visit the park, Administrator Whitman demonstrated her personal commitment to address the pollution problems in the park’s highest point, Clingman’s Dome. Where Administrator Whitman looked out on a vista where natural visibility should be about 77 miles, but on the hot July day we visited, was reduced to only 15 miles. Air entering the southern Appalachian Mountains is influenced by geography and weather patterns, capturing pollution and harmful emissions in the park, and no place is that point made more clear than at Clingman’s Dome.

Any plan to clean up the air in the Great Smoky Mountains National Park must contain two essential elements. First, we must reduce harmful emissions of sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxides. President Bush has proposed a plan, the Clear Skies Initiative, that contains the most dramatic reductions in these harmful emissions ever proposed by an administration. The plan would reduce power plant emissions by 70 percent by the year 2018. I will continue to closely monitor the Clear Skies Initiative and its potential impact on our mountains and across our state.

Second, we must reduce emissions in the most efficient and effective manner possible. Our quality of life and future economic development depends on how we pursue these reductions. Tennesseans’ families, businesses and communities depend on affordable and reliable energy. A thoughtful and responsible approach to address the park’s air quality issue requires us to closely examine any proposal and to ensure it is based on sound science. Tennesseans and all Americans deserve no less from their elected officials.

It is also important to remember that any air pollution is a comprehensive problem that requires a comprehensive response. Roughly, one-half of the problems in the Smokies are caused by power plants, one third by cars and trucks, and the rest from various other sources. In order to address all of these, we must address every source of emissions. For example, I want to commend local officials for Pigeon Forge’s recent Clean Air Week which promoted reducing emissions through the use of low emission public transportation. Park officials are looking at alternatives to transportation problems in the park, which will not only clean up the air, but enhance the overall visitor’s experience. Continued discussion by all, local, State and federal officials along with concerned citizens, will ensure the most innovative, common-sense solutions and ensure we do what’s best for the Smokies.

Tennesseans are blessed with an abundance of natural resources, and the Great Smoky Mountains National Park is world-renowned. However, we must be mindful that if we are to continue to enjoy the Smokies, all of us have a responsibility to be good stewards of the park. I am committed to fight for what is best for the Smokies, and I am encouraged by Administrator Whitman’s recent visit. The Smokies are a unique American experience that must be preserved for generations to come, so that fathers and sons, just like Harrison and I, can know the joys of spending time together on a hike in the woods.

CRIMINAL PENALTIES RELATING TO TERRORIST ATTACKS

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, due to time constraints, the Congressional Budget Office, CBO, estimate was not included in the report to accompany S. 2621, an act to provide a definition of ‘terrorism’ to enhance the U.S. approach to combating terrorism. The law passed the Senate on May 7, 2002.

The report is
Forty years, two children, Nancy and Doug, and ten grandchildren later, my dear friend Kirke Nelson retired from active medical practice on July 1, 2002, leaving behind a legacy that has enriched the very fabric of the community to which he and his family mean so much.

For 40 years, Dr. Van Kirke Nelson delivered the town’s babies. Lots of babies. So many, in fact, that it is not unusual for him to look at a list of Flathead High graduates and determine that he has delivered a majority of them.

Think of it this way. At 10 babies a month, 12 months a year, for 41 years, Kirke delivered roughly 4,920 babies in his career. To put that in perspective, those 4,920 new Montanans are a larger group than the entire population of 22 of Montana’s 56 counties.

But the quality of Kirke’s career cannot be measured in numbers. Every day he changed lives and made the Flathead Valley and Montana a better place to live. Partners, co-workers, patients and their families all know what I mean. There are more stories than one can possibly tell, and you can be assured that although he is retired, there will be many, many more stories yet to come.

Because you see, Kirke Nelson will never retire from making a difference in the world around him. The phone may not ring in the middle of the night anymore, but knowing Kirke as I do, that just means he’ll just be better rested for the challenges that lay ahead.

I know no better Montanans than Kirke and Helen Nelson. I wish for them in this retirement an enriched life with each other and their wonderful family. There are not thanks enough for this kind of career that Kirke has shared with us, but that’s what makes America so great. Ours is a country where dreams can come true. Where promises are our bond. And where ordinary careers become extraordinary because of the people who live them.

Kirke Nelson’s career has been truly extraordinary. And on behalf of a grateful community, State and nation, it is my honor to rise today to say thank you.

IN RECOGNITION OF WESLEY COLLEGE ATHLETICS COACH RICK McCALL AND CHRIS NOLL, 2002 NCAA NATIONAL GOLF CHAMPIONS

Mr. CARPER. Mr. President, I rise today to congratulate Wesley College’s Chris Noll, the 2002 NCAA National Golf Champion. His victory demonstrates the success that comes from hard work, perseverance, experience of a remarkable team, a dedicated coach, and the support of an outstanding college.

The championship competition held in Nebraska last month ended a dramatic, record-breaking season for the Wolverines. After a stellar overall performance throughout the year, the Wolverines were selected by a committee to play in the NCAA Championships. At the championship, they scored their highest finish in both Wesley College records and in Pennsylvania Athletic Conference history. The team dominated the Conference and won the Pennsylvania Athletic Conference Tournament.

Throughout the season, Chris Noll set Wesley College records. He finished first in the Glen Health Ship Builders, the Wesley College Invitational, the King’s College National Invitational tournaments and the District II Championships. The Dover sophomore was named Pennsylvania Athletic Conference Player of the Week for four consecutive weeks in addition to a Ping All-American. He closed the season as the 2002 NCAA National Golf Champion.

For the past decade Wolverine Coach Rick McCall has worked tirelessly to successfully build and strengthen the men’s golf program. McCall was named Mid-Atlantic Region Coach of the Year this season, as well as the Pennsylvania Athletic Conference Coach of the Year. In 1989 he won the Delaware State Golf Association Annual Golf Award. Later he was given the Pat Knight Award for his lifetime contribution to junior golf and two Philadelphia P.G.A. Junior Golf Awards. He is dedicated to the game.

The success of Wesley’s golf team is indicative of the depth of the community’s support, and the caliber of students, faculty, and staff at the College. I commend those associated with Wesley College athletics for their commitment to preparing athletes for success both on and off the course.

Today, I congratulate Coach Rick McCall, Chris Noll and all of the fine athletes on the golf team. Athletics play a vital role in the development and success of a wide variety of students. Wesley College athletes prove that the school’s emphasis on the “carry-over value of athletics” is warranted. I am proud of their achievements as student-athletes.

PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Nevada for his courtesies, as always.

Mr. President, I serve on the Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee and am pleased that we reported out a bill to improve generic drug competition in America and to address the high cost of prescription drugs. The Hatch-Waxman Act, which in 1984, is considered to be a remarkable piece of legislation. It strives to provide patent protection to companies that invests hundreds of millions of dollars to develop new drugs. At the same time, it limits that protection by allowing generic competition. It allows generic drug manufacturers to take a patented drug, produce it, and sell it at a much lower price, a competitive price, driving down the price of drugs for consumers.

Since 1984 the scales, it appears, have tilted too much in favor of the name-brand producer of the drug, the patent holder of the drug, and too much against the generic manufacturers. There have been some problems on both sides of this issue. Loopholes of the Hatch-Waxman Act are being exploited, giving one side an advantage over the other. In fact, of the things that has occurred is some generic companies have challenged patents and have gotten the right to produce patented drugs, because they have challenged it using the procedures of the act. Then they enter into an agreement with the original patent holder to not produce the generic drug. They thereby agree to compete with the name-brand manufacturer. This is a loophole that needs to be eliminated.

I believe S.812 will help recover the delicate balance that was originally intended by the Hatch-Waxman Act. I believe it will also encourage production of drugs the way we intended, but at the same time will eliminate unfair patent extensions. I believe that by reporting this bill out of committee, we are moving in the right direction. I salute Senators Edwards, Collins, Schumer, and McCain who have worked to produce this legislation. I think it is going to be something that we can all support.

I know we will be beginning to talk about prescription drugs in general later this week, and I think it is time to do so. This Congress voted—I voted—for a budget last year that set aside $300 billion for prescription drug benefit. However, we were not able to pass a prescription drug benefit last year, and it remains to be seen whether we will be successful this year.

There are a lot of different views about how prescription drugs should be handled. Over the Fourth of July weekend, I visited two assisted care living facilities in Alabama: Chateau Vestavia near Birmingham and Westminster in Mobile, Alabama. I talked with seniors who have high insurance bills and listened to what they had to say. I wanted to have their input as the Senate moved toward considering a prescription drug proposal. They told me that they are most concerned about high drug prices. I spoke with seniors that are struggling to pay for their drugs.

My mother is in her eighties. She has a $300-a-month drug bill. She is in relatively good health, although she has arthritis and high blood pressure. Her sister’s drug bill is even higher than that each month. They are both in an assisted living center. They are getting by, but it is not easy. For people who rely on their Social Security as their sole income, they are not able to get by with those drug prices.

We know we have a problem. The theory is this: If this federal government, through Medicare, will pay for the removal of a kidney, or will pay for the amputation of a leg, is it not irrational that we would not pay to fund drugs that would keep people from having to have a kidney removed or keep people from having to have an amputation because they are diabetic?

We are at a point where drugs are such a central part of health care in America, that we cannot leave them out of Medicare.

The seniors I visited with in Alabama want us here in the Senate to address the high cost of drugs. They believe they would like to see less paperwork in the process, less bureaucracy, and less fraud. They would also like to see that they can go to their local pharmacy and buy the drugs there and talk to a pharmacist about them if they choose. They would like to be able to buy through direct mail and mail order if they choose. Those are things we will have to wrestle with. I intend to be talking with more seniors as time goes by so we can listen to their concerns and desires and see what we can do to pass a responsible bill.

We are not doing anything to help Medicare beneficiaries pay for drugs today. We should not fail to act at all costs. We ought to be able to drive down the cost of prescription drugs by up to 20, 30, or 40 percent. That would be a tremendous savings. It would be good if we could do that today—and not wait any longer. It would be a monumental step forward.

We want our seniors to have choice and to not have to give up their current coverage plans. We do not want them to have to enter into some sort of mandatory plan that costs them more and provides less benefits.

Beneficiaries should have information and the choice to choose between whether they want generic drugs or name-brand drugs. That is a choice that many can make. We need to make sure that option is available to them.

We did vote for a budget last year that provides for $300 billion for prescription drugs. We have allowed our discretionary spending last year hit about a 7 percent increase. This year, likewise, with defense and supplemental, it could be greater than that. If we get our spending under control and contain excessive spending, we ought to be able to fund a plan that would meet the needs of thousands of seniors who are in a crisis situation today.

Politics should be put on the back burner. It is time to ask ourselves how we can accomplish passing a piece of legislation that we all can support, that the American people would like to see passed, and that we can afford. We can do this, if we watch our cost and do not let it get out of control. If we are smart and work at it and do it in a way that is bipartisan as this generic bill was passed out of the HELP Committee last week, we can make good progress for America. I look forward to the debate and hope we can achieve that before the recess.

I yield the floor.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO JEAN-JACQUES CARQUILLAT

HON. MAURICE D. HINCHEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. HINCHEY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to congratulate my constituent and dear friend, Jean-Jacques Carquillat, on the occasion of his attainment of United States citizenship. Mr. Carquillat is a valued and well-respected member of our community, and I am proud to welcome him as a full citizen to the 26th Congressional District of New York State.

I became acquainted with Jean-Jacques, as well as his family, through his businesses in the Uptown Historic District in Kingston, NY. In 1994, Jean-Jacques established Le Carnard Enchaine, a Zagat-rated, fine dining restaurant. He also started a dance club and special events catering business in 2000. The success of these businesses led to his more recent opening of Luke’s Place, a gourmet restaurant, in the Town of Shandaken, named after his young son.

I have witnessed the hard work, strong character and integrity that Jean-Jacques has brought to the projects he has undertaken. His businesses have had positive impacts on our local area, creating jobs in the City of Kingston and enhancing the city’s efforts to promote tourism in the historic district. Jean-Jacques has been an active member of the Uptown Kingston Business Association and received its Excellence Award for 1999. In addition, he has been a consistent and strong supporter of various local nonprofit community organizations.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to join Jean-Jacques Carquillat’s colleagues, friends and family in extending my congratulations on his naturalization. His personal and professional enthusiasm has made him a valuable asset to our community, and I am confident that he will continue to serve in the most admirable way both his community and our great nation.

HONORING THE NAMING OF THE DOUGLAS MORRISSON THEATER IN RECOGNITION OF DOUGLAS F. MORRISSON’S 40 YEARS AS A BOARD MEMBER OF THE HAYWARD AREA RECREATION AND PARK DISTRICT

HON. MICHAEL M. HONDA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. HONDA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my colleagues to join me in honoring the life and work of Mr. Douglas Morrisson, whose amazing life came to a peaceful end on March 12, 2002, after 94 wonderful years. Mr. Morrisson committed his extraordinary life to the betterment of others, through social work, teaching, writing, and countless other endeavors, culminating in the creation of the Georgia Travis Center for homeless women and children. This shelter, along with the indelible imprint she left on so many lives, will stand forever as the legacy left by this amazing woman.

Georgia Travis dedicated her personal and professional life to helping others. Born in 1908 in Kansas City, Missouri, Georgia was brought up in a family with a keen awareness of social injustice and inequity. She was taught to lend a helping hand to those in need, a notion that would dictate the course of her long life. After becoming one of the first students to earn a master’s degree from the University of Chicago School of Social Service Administration, she began working in the relatively new field of medical social work, helping stress patients in Chicago and disabled children in Seattle. By the late 1930s, Ms. Travis was traveling the country as a consultant for the new Washington, DC-based Crippled Children Service Department and the U.S. Transient Bureau. In 1953, Georgia was awarded a Fulbright Scholarship which sent her to Sydney, Australia, to teach. Shortly after returning to the States, she settled into what would eventually become her permanent home, the Bay Area of California.

The State of California may never fully realize the full extent of Ms. Travis’ contributions, but I would like to take moment to share some of the many highlights. By 1962, just a few years after arriving in the Bay Area, she was named California Social Worker of the year. A year later she became a professor of Social Services at San Diego State University, teaching graduate level courses until her retirement in 1970. But Georgia’s idea of “retirement” was as unconventional as it was prolific. Ms. Travis lived in retirement with the same spirit and ideals of her childhood and professional life; she could sense injustice and suffering, create solutions, and see the process through to the end. After the passing of her mother in 1971, Georgia found solace and balance in the Quaker faith, and became a member of the Quaker Society of Friends. Strengthened by her new faith, Georgia focused her efforts on the plight of the homeless community, a pursuit that would lead her to some of the biggest accomplishments of her life. She started out projects like providing meals at the Family Center in Agnew’s Hospital and distributing clothing at the Family Shelter in East San Jose. Then, with the help of the American Association of University Women, Georgia organized a committee that develops and provides the homeless, especially women and children, with improved services and outreach. She convinced Stanford University to conduct a major study on homeless children, and helped initiate educational programs for the children as well. Mr. Speaker, the list of her successes, of the tangible changes she made for thousands of people, is far too long to describe here. But I would like to make note of perhaps her greatest accomplishment of all: the establishment of the Georgia Travis Center. In 1992, the nonprofit San Jose shelter agency InnVision honored the wishes of Ms. Travis by opening a new shelter for homeless women and children in Uptown.” women and children, to be named after the woman who perhaps had done more for their cause than anyone else in the city’s history. At the Center, volunteers help women and children get back on their feet by providing meals, medical care, childhood-development courses, and classes on computers and career planning. The Center provides them not only with new hope for the future, but a sense of security and value that may have been taken away from them when their homes were lost. Ever humble, Ms. Travis was embarrassed by the attention of having her name immortalized, but the Georgia Travis Center will forever be a working tribute to Georgia’s insatiable desire to empower, enlighten, and improve the lives of those in need of help.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to mourn the loss of a friend and a role model. I had many opportunities to work with Ms. Travis, and what amazed me most about her was the ability she had to instill in others the same passion and resolve that she herself had in everything she set out to accomplish. The Bay Area should feel fortunate to be chosen as the beneficiary of her great works, and I personally feel fortunate to represent a district so deeply touched by her.

RECOGNIZING RICHARD P. SESSLER

HON. SHERWOOD L. BOEHLERT
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Richard “Dick” Sessler for his 12 years of dedication and service to the Mohawk Valley Resource Center for Refugees. On June 28th, 2002, Mr. Sessler retired from his post as Executive Director for the Refugee Center. During his tenure, he was instrumental in the successful resettlement of close to 10,000 refugees from Bosnia, Russia, Vietnam, Burma, and Sudan to the Utica, NY area. Mr. Sessler is a visionary and a truly remarkable leader. Under his leadership the Mohawk Valley Resource Center for Refugees expanded significantly, initiated innovative services and formed many meaningful partnerships with a large number of community organizations.

Mr. Sessler’s work with the center dates back to 1990 when he was first hired as Associate Director and later promoted to Executive Director in 1993. During that time the Center has grown tremendously. The Refugee Center now offers three well staffed and well developed programs that have been made more effective: a health program, an education program, and an excellent job placement program. In addition, Mr. Sessler was involved in the establishment of an on-site clinic, night-time English classes (ESL), a dental program, a community relations program and citizenship classes.

Upon his retirement, Mr. Sessler plans to continue to offer his services to the refugee community. His plans include consulting and serving as an active member of the Lutheran Immigration Service (LIRS). I am confident that he will continue to offer his knowledge and experience and serve as a tremendous asset to the LIRS.

Mr. Sessler’s commitment to the Refugee Center should serve as an inspiration to all. Mr. Sessler was and is to be well respected and well liked by all that have the pleasure to work with him. He has touched and reshaped the lives of many war-torn men, women and children across the globe by helping them escape brutal religious and political persecution—I commend him for his efforts. I am confident that the Mohawk Valley Resource Center for Refugees will continue to maintain its excellent reputation, level of professionalism, and success that Mr. Sessler worked so diligently to instill within it.

Pledge of Allegiance

HON. CLIFF STEARNS
OF FLORIDA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to remind Americans why the Pledge of Allegiance is so important in light of the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals Court decision. I’d like to submit Chief Justice of the Alabama Supreme Court Roy S. Moore’s July 1998 statement titled “Our American Birthright.” At that time, Justice Moore was a Circuit Court Judge.

Our American Birthright
(By Roy S. Moore)

One nation under God was their cry and declaration.
Upon the law of nature’s God they built a mighty nation.
For unlike mankind before them who had walked this earthen sod, these men would never question the sovereignty of God.
That all men were “created” was a truth “self-evident.” To secure the rights God gave us was the role of government.
And if any form of government became destructive of this end, it was their right, their duty, a new one to begin.
So with firm reliance on Divine Providence for protection, they pledged their sacred honor and sought His wise direction.
They lifted an appeal to God for all the world to see, and declared their independence forever to be free.
I’m glad they’re not here with us to see the mess we’re in.
How we’ve given up our righteousness for a life of indolent sin.
For when abortion isn’t murder and sodomy is deemed a right.
Then all that was made good and darkness is now called light.
While truth and law were founded on the God of All Creation,
Today our country is at war and once again many brave people have gone off to fight in defense of freedom. They are truly the wings of the butterfly. Just as I picked up Bailey and placed her safely on my lap the troops fighting now, and the troops that have fought for us in the past picked up America, and started to fly. In order to start us swelling with renewed strength we need a visionary leader who will lead us into peaceful skies.

The American soldiers don’t have an easy task ahead of them. We are just now, just kicking off of the rocky ground. But I have no doubt that we will fly. A butterfly has two wings. Each equally important. The soldiers will no doubt put 100% into flying our country to the freedom of the open skies. But we the American people must put equal- ly as much effort into flying the country higher. All of us as a team must reach out to America’s future. Without knowing us people have laid down their lives so that we would be able to enjoy the freedoms that are now being threatened. America too has a dream stone. Only it comes in a different form. It is tri-colored in red, white, and blue. Red for the blood shed yesterday, White for the pure freedoms we enjoy today and Blue for the endless clear skies of tomorrow.

Our flag is a dream stone holding inside of it the very hopes and dreams of our Na- tion. We held tight to it as it was proudly carried through World War One, World War Two, Desert Storm, and Vietnam and Korea. While we were enjoying a time of great prosper- ity we tucked our stone away in our pocket. On September 11th it pulled out of our pockets when the firefighters proudly raised it high at zero ground, athletes dis- played it on their jerseys, and average Amer- icans flew it from their cars and homes. My generation knows how to dream. Will the generation after us be able to say the same? We must reach out and place the knowledge of the past into the hands of the future. When we give the future generations with knowledge our country is sure to thrive. It is estimated that over one million men and women have died in service to our great country. Let us, America’s present, take pride in our history and reach out to the future by passing along our knowledge and our great American dream stone. Be- cause without a doubt America’s future is whatever America dreams it to be.

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, last week, on July 11, 2002, several of my colleagues, Ms. BALDWIN, Ms. LEE, Mr. MCDERMOTT, and Ms. CARSON, declared that it was time for this Congressional Black Caucus, the Progressive Caucus, and the Asian Pacific American Caucus, the “Congressional Universal Health Care Task Force,” in order to build the mo- mentum for passage of universal health care legislation by 2004.

We currently have 86 co-sponsors for this bill. There are over 325 national, state, and local organizations that support it as well. Mr. Speaker, I introduced House Concurrent Resolution 99 with several of my colleagues from the “Congressional Universal Health Care Task Force,” in order to build the mo- mentum for passage of universal health care legislation by 2004.

We have no doubt that we will fly. A butterfly has two wings. Each equally important. The soldiers will no doubt put 100% into flying our country to the freedom of the open skies. On September 11th it pulled out of our pockets when the firefighters proudly raised it high at zero ground, athletes dis- played it on their jerseys, and average Amer- icans flew it from their cars and homes. My generation knows how to dream. Will the generation after us be able to say the same? We must reach out and place the knowledge of the past into the hands of the future. When we give the future generations with knowledge our country is sure to thrive. It is estimated that over one million men and women have died in service to our great country. Let us, America’s present, take pride in our history and reach out to the future by passing along our knowledge and our great American dream stone. Be- cause without a doubt America’s future is whatever America dreams it to be.

We now know empirically, based on the re- cent Institute of Medicine’s 2002 report on the uninsured, that 18,000 Americans die each year because they were uninsured. If we truly care about the health and well being of work- ing families, and those with serious illnesses who are too sick to work, we would ensure that all Americans would have peace of mind, as they do in Europe and Canada, to acces- sible, affordable, high quality, and comprehen- sive health care for all guaranteed by law. In Michigan, thousands of uninsured HIV/ AIDS patients cannot afford the necessary cocktail of life sustaining drugs due to the high costs cut backs of government subsidized HIV/AIDS prescription drug programs. Can we continue to allow the uninsured chronically ill, those who have serious physical or mental health problems, to go without health care for long periods of time, jeopardizing their lives, and needlessly suffering due to having un- treated illnesses? For Congress to ignore these health care injustices and continue to “wish our health crisis away” is both immoral and cold hearted.

Plain and simple, if you do not have health insurance, you will receive “second class medicine,” as Consumer Reports magazine highlighted in an in depth story published last year. This is particularly true if you are African American or Hispanic. Might I remind you that the first question a nurse or hospital intake ad- minister asks the patient is not, “May I help you,” but rather, “Do you have health insur- ance?” The uninsured chronically ill need long term health care treatment, prescription drugs, or medical equipment. Currently, mil- lions of uninsured chronically ill patients must suffer the indignities of spending days and weeks searching for charity care. They often borrow money from relatives or friends just to pay for prescription drugs or to see a doctor. This is wrong and we all know it.

For the past two years, the “Congressional Universal Health Care Task Force” has spon- sored several briefings with my colleagues from the Congressional Black Caucus, Pro- gressive Caucus, Hispanic Caucus, and the Asian Pacific American Caucus on the unin- sured crisis in America. We have heard story after story of untold suffering by uninsured or under-insured Americans. We have also heard from numerous physicians who saw patients who could not afford the treatment, or any of it. We also hear from physicians who witnessed family members who died, because they delayed treat- ment only because they were uninsured. I urge Members of Congress to read “As Sick As It Gets,” by Rudolph Mueller, M.D., a ground breaking book about the shocking re- ality of America’s healthcare system. The book documents case after case of Dr. Mueller’s patients who tragically became chronically ill, or died, as a result of delaying health care only because they were uninsured.

The Task Force has heard from numerous Americans whose creativity has been expended for life, and went into bankruptcy due to thousands of dollars of unpaid medical bills. There are ap- proximately 200,000 bankruptcies in America each year due to unpaid medical bills. Individ- uals and families should not have to experi- ence the pain and humiliation of declaring bankruptcy just because they got sick. I heard testimony last year from two Washington D.C. residents, a husband and wife with cancer, both high school teachers, who declared bank- ruptcy just due to the high costs of chemotherapy. The two were both insured, and they had to rely on their credit cards to cover the costs of treatment, due to inadequate private health insurance coverage. Their daughter, who has Hepatitis C, called dozens of doctors but was denied access because she was uninsured. She is having a difficult time returning to work, because she needs long term therapy and treatment in order to be productive again. This is a national disgrace.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe, unlike many of my colleagues, that universal health care means the federal government provides vouchers so Americans can purchase costly and inferior or private health insurance, that in most cases, will not adequately cover one’s health care needs, especially if an individual or family has a chronic illness. Universal health care is not a system where health decisions are made by HMO bureaucrats instead of physicians. Furthermore, it is not a system where the patient receives some kind of health insurance coverage through an HMO or a private health insurance plan, but does not have the freedom to choose their physician.

It is my hope that we will achieve universal health care one day by extending, strengthening, and expanding Medicare to all Americans. Medicare has a 2–3 percent administrative overhead, versus the 20–30 percent administrative overhead costs of an HMO or private health insurance plan. The CBO in 1991 reported that we would save $100 billion dollars a year if we established a public health insurance program for all Americans. Many health care economists contend that a tax payer financed national health insurance program would cost the average family of three a total of $739 dollars a year for all of their health care costs, as opposed to the thousands of dollars needlessly wasted on premiums, co-pays, and high deductibles of a private health insurance plan. If we continue to support the idea that health care must be run like a business, and we continue to worship at the alter of private health insurance, it will be difficult if not impossible to cover the skyrocketing costs of primary care, prescription drugs, mental health services, and long term care through a private health insurance dominated system.

National health insurance would save billions of dollars through reduced emergency room visits, reduced chronic illnesses, and a dramatic reduction in uncompensated care for public hospitals which treat the uninsured after they have developed full blown chronic illnesses. Prevention is the key here. All Americans would have access to affordable primary care, and therefore, illnesses such as hypertension, cancer, heart conditions, pre-natal health conditions, respiratory, or kidney problems would be dramatically reduced due to having access to regularly scheduled check-ups.

Mr. Speaker, every sector of the American public is calling for health care coverage for all. Citizens, business, labor, the faith community, civil rights organizations, community clinics, public hospitals, the media, physicians, state and local officials; all are calling for health care for all. The time has come for Congress to act on the crisis of the uninsured. Let’s join the rest of the industrialized West, and ensure that all Americans receive high quality and affordable health care.

I urge my colleagues to co-sponsor House Concurrent Resolution 99. Let’s show the American people that we truly care about their health. We can not allow another 18,000 Americans to die next year because they are uninsured.

DEATH OF DHIRUBHAI AMBANI

HON. JIM McDERMOTT OF WASHINGTON
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, as the current Co-Chairman of the Congressional Caucus on India and Indian Americans, I note with great sadness the recent death of Dhirubhai Ambani, the founder of The Reliance Group, India’s largest and most profitable company.

Dhirubhai Ambani began his illustrious business career as a small trader of fabrics in rural Gujurat. Over the next half decade, he transformed his small business into a diverse economic powerhouse which included vibrant businesses in petrochemicals, petroleum, polyesters, telecommunications, securities and cutting edge technologies. Unlike many older Indian businesses, however, Reliance chose a new path on its ascendency to becoming a Forbes World 500 Company. And Dhirubhai Ambani was the architect of Reliance’s success.

Dhirubhai Ambani chose not to keep his businesses as a family concern. Instead, he floated equity shares and thereby allowed millions of middle-class Indians to join with him in enjoying Reliance’s decades of economic success. Indeed, there are now more than three million investors in India’s largest and most widely held company, which is also the largest exporter from India, as well as the largest private sector source of revenue to the Indian government.

Mr. Speaker, Dhirubhai Ambani was a legend in India. He was also a role model for entrepreneurs around the world, as well as having served as a shining example of India’s economic potential. I am confident that all of the Members of Congress join with me in expressing our sympathy to the entire Ambani family. In particular, we send our heartfelt condolences to his widow, Kokilaben Ambani, and her two sons, Mukesh and Anil, who have assumed the helm of India’s largest economic vessel. Dhirubhai Ambani’s legacy is large, but his sons will continue to build on their father’s many achievements.

Even seasoned NIST employees admitted they were covering new ground as no one could ever imagine such an event as 9/11 happening.

In the immediate aftermath of September 11th, NIST had to try to do its job amidst emergency respondents, police officers, and incomprehensible loss.

In this extraordinarily challenging situation, critical evidence—like beams, steel work, and cables—was being carted off before the NIST team had a chance to even catalogue or identify.

Given the fact that the scope of this tragedy had never been seen before, it is understandable that the investigation would be less than ideal.

But it is important that we learn from this tragedy.

And there are several lessons to be learned from September 11th. One lesson is the importance of a swift and thorough investigation of a building failure.

NIST’s response teams must have access to building debris as soon as it’s safe to enter a site.

And they must be able to move and preserve this critical evidence. This bill gives NIST that authority.

Looking toward the future, it is important to do all we can to prevent a building failure of any kind from ever happening. This bill will allow us to obtain information to help prevent building failures.

And it is important for us to swiftly and thoroughly respond to the community when building failures, God forbid, happen. And this bill does that.

I urge your support of H.R. 4687.

IN RECOGNITION OF JOSE L. LASTRA

HON. E. CLAY SHAW, JR.
OF FLORIDA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Jose L. Lastra, a man who has served with distinction in the Social Security Administration in South Florida for 30 years.

Born in Cardenas, Cuba in 1948, Jose Lastra arrived in the United States on September 28th, 1961, speaking no English and carrying with him nothing but a strong work ethic and determination. Graduating from Miami Edison High School in 1966, Jose continued his education, earning a degree in History with a minor in Political Science from Florida Atlantic University, with post-graduate studies at the University of Miami School of Hispanic American Studies and Florida International University’s School of Public Administration.

Mr. Lastra entered public service on July 17, 1972, when he was hired for the position of Service Representative in the Miami Beach Social Security Office. This month marks his 30th anniversary with the Social Security Administration. Over the last three decades, Jose has served with distinction in a number of positions in the South Florida Area, including:

1. Service, claims and field representative, Hispanic Program Officer, and manager of the Cuban-Haitian Emergency Processing Office and the Riverside Branch Office.
of his outstanding work, Jose was awarded the Commissioner’s Citation in 1980, 1991, and 1992, and the Commissioner’s Team Award in 1997.

In 1990, Mr. Lastra was appointed Area Director of South Florida. In this capacity, he oversees thirty-three Social Security field offices with a workforce of 1,978 employees. The South Florida Area includes more than 2 million Social Security beneficiaries, many of whom reside in my district. As Chairman of the House Social Security Subcommittee, I am especially grateful for all of Mr. Lastra’s hard work on behalf of my senior constituents.

Today, I am pleased to recognize a man who has taken full advantage of what America offers. Coming to this country as a young immigrant from Cuba, he studied hard, worked tirelessly and rose from an entry level position to one of leadership in the Social Security Administration. A true sign of his character, Jose is held in the highest regard by those who work with him and for him. Jose L. Lastra’s life and achievements represent the dream of opportunity that America so proudly boasts.

ON THE RETIREMENT OF JOHN DURANT OF CUSTOMS

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, it is my honor today to acknowledge the retirement of John Durant, Director of Commercial Rulings for the U.S. Customs Service. Mr. Durant retires after 33 years of federal service, with almost 31 years of that time with Customs. John Durant served in Customs field offices in Boston and Houston, before coming to Headquarters office in Washington DC. John is well known to all members of the international trade community and the trade bar as a preeminent expert on Customs matters and has been instrumental in the effort to modernize Customs’ procedures for the benefit of trade and our economy.

Thirty years has seen remarkable changes in how trade has taken on an ever more important role in our country’s economic success. Just in the last decade, trade has grown 132 percent, and by 2004, Customs will be processing more than 30 million commercial entries a year. This is up from 12.3 million in 1994 more than double the level of 10 years earlier. John has had the unenviable but critical role in overseeing more than 12,000 commercial rulings that Customs issues each year on arcane topics as tariff classification, country of origin and marking. He was also the liaison with the trade community for Customs during discussions leading up to the passage and implementation of the Customs Modernization Act of 1993.

For the Congress, however, Mr. Durant will always be known as Customs point man, and sometimes lightening rod, on trade legislation. For the past 14 years, Mr. Durant has been invaluable to the Congress in providing timely and useful technical comments on draft legislation. Much of trade legislation is not exciting or entertaining. It requires people who are professional and very attentive to detail. Mr. Durant is the leader of such men and women at Customs and he does so with a sense of humor. He has been the “man to see” at Customs for answers on trade matters. His retirement will be sorely felt by Customs, Congress, and the trade community.

I am very grateful for all of his help throughout the years. John is a delightful man to work with. We wish him the best in his retirement and his future endeavors. We hope Mr. Durant will return to the nation’s Capital and lend his considerable talents to the private sector.

TRIBUTE TO MR. JOHN WALLACH

HON. JOE KONOLLENSBERG
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. KONOLLENSBERG. Mr. Speaker, today I join the chorus of voices around the world to express my admiration and respect for Mr. John Wallach. On July 10, 2002, John Wallach passed away after a life of passion, hope, and heart. I offer my condolences to the family and friends of this truly great man.

Throughout his life, John Wallach approached all things with heartfelt passion. As an award-winning peace activist, and friend to so many individuals throughout the world, Mr. Wallach inspired those around him to believe in themselves and achieve their dreams.

I had the opportunity to meet Mr. Wallach through his work as founder of, and force behind, the organization Seeds of Peace. Seeds of Peace promotes understanding and long-term stability by uniting teenagers from areas of regional conflict for a unique mediating program at its neutral site in Otisfield, Maine. It was John Wallach’s confidence that hope and progress can succeed that enabled Seeds of Peace to grow from simply an idea into the world leader in conflict resolution for youth. I have personally visited this camp in Maine, and seen first-hand the positive effect it has on the participants. Seeds of Peace has established a network of peace builders, who now serve as an inspirational part of John Wallach’s legacy.

Before embarking on a second career as an ambassador of peace and mutual understanding, Mr. Wallach had a distinguished career in journalism and as an author. From 1968 to 1994, he served as diplomatic correspondent, White House correspondent, and foreign editor for the Hearst Newspapers. His articles earned many prizes, including two Overseas Press Club awards, the Edward Weintal Prize and the Edwin Hood Award, the highest honor presented by the National Press Club. In 1979, President Carter presented Mr. Wallach with the Congressional Committee of Correspondents Award for his coverage of the Egyptian-Israeli Camp David summit. As an author, he co-authored with his wife Janet Wallach their book, The Plague of the Beholder. Still Small Voices, and The New Palestinians. Mr. Wallach has also written The Enemy has a Face.

John Wallach was a man with an enormous heart. Throughout his life he took chances to make progress, and motivated others to follow their hearts. The world will miss a better place because of John Wallach, and I join many people around the world to commend him and thank him for what he has done.

STATEMENT ON INTERNATIONAL AIDS CONFERENCE

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, last week in Barcelona, Spain, 15,000 people came together for the 14th International AIDS Conference for “Knowledge and Commitment for Action.”

We know that in 2001, there were 5 million new AIDS infections across the globe. Today there are 40 million people living with AIDS worldwide, and there are 14 million AIDS orphans. Currently, in Africa more than 28 million people are living with HIV/AIDS; however, only 30,000 are in treatment.

In comparison, in the United States, nearly 100 percent of the people who need treatment receive it. 99 percent of the African people living with AIDS do not have access to antiretroviral drugs because they are simply too poor to purchase them.

In Barcelona, thousands came together to call for treatment now, and presented the “Barcelona Declaration,” which was also read during the opening session of the Conference. Nelson Mandela and former President Clinton have pledged their assistance to help raise awareness and funding for the UN Global AIDS Trust Fund.

This declaration called for securing donations of $10 billion dollars per year for global AIDS; Antiretroviral (ARV) treatment for at least two million people with HIV/AIDS in the developing world by 2004; lower, affordable ARV drug prices and universal access to generics in the developing world; and a new global partnership between government and NGOs.

I am urging that Congress and the President in a bi-partisan spirit, bolster UN efforts to combat the AIDS pandemic, provide 2 billion dollars to the United Nations Global AIDS Fund, to help pay for the costs of HIV/AIDS treatment and prevention programs. This Administration has allocated $200 million dollars to fight global AIDS. I wholeheartedly agree with the activists in Barcelona that $200 million is not enough to combat the “Plague” of the 21st century.

The United States must put at least $2 billion into the Global Trust Fund. Dr. Peter Piot, the Director of UNAIDS said that a $10 billion effort will only begin to make a dent in the crisis. It is a falsehood to say that spending money on AIDS in Africa would simply be a waste of money. Critics of the fund incorrectly say that corrupt dictators will take the money and use it to enrich themselves. In Uganda, Thailand and Senegal, for example, strong national leadership partnered with a community-wide response are reducing new HIV infections and AIDS diagnoses and focusing on treatment at meager costs. There are hundreds of AIDS organizations and government officials around the world that are monitoring the progress of the Fund. Please . . . let’s give it a chance to work.

I am urging today that my colleagues in Congress, the Bush Administration, the private sector, the pharmaceutical companies, and the more affluent nations of the European Community and Asia to provide the remaining 8 billion necessary to combat the AIDS pandemic. France, Germany, Japan, Taiwan, and the oil rich Countries of the Middle East are not providing enough funding to the UN Global AIDS Trust.

I have often heard the argument that we can not afford to treat and prevent HIV/AIDS patients around the world who have AIDS, or will continue to do so in the future. Nothing on this planet can persuade me that America, and the industrialized countries of the East and West, with nations with trillion dollar economies, do not have the resources to combat the AIDS pandemic. But the truth of the matter, and I have seen it over decades, is that the international community will follow our lead if we provide the moral and financial leadership on HIV/AIDS. Again, this has not been the case.

I am also urging my colleagues to call a meeting with the pharmaceutical companies, and begin the much needed discussion on how to bring the price of HIV/AIDS prescription drugs down so that the poorer nations, in particularly those in Africa, can afford to buy them or generic drugs. In times of international health disasters, we must put the lives of people first and profits second. Sadly, this has not been the case.

In the United States, 950,000 people have been diagnosed with AIDS. African Americans make up only 13 percent of the total U.S. population but 54 percent of new infections. 82 percent of women who are newly infected with HIV are African-American and Latino.

In Michigan, AIDS patients who are dependent on federal programs to help cover the costs of HIV/AIDS drugs are now saying that due to budget cuts, they are having difficulty affording HIV/AIDS drugs. We can not allow this to happen.

It is imperative that we as a nation provide the requisite funds necessary to provide adequate treatment and prevention for HIV/AIDS both at home and abroad.

COMMENORATING THE 40TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY OF JOE AND BARBARA SALZMAN

HON. MICHAEL M. HONDA
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. HONDA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Joe and Barbara Saltzman who were married on July 1, 1962, and are now celebrating their 40th wedding anniversary. They are the children of Ruth and Murray Saltzman, and the grandparents of Samantha and Sarah Saltzman.

Joe and Barbara Saltzman have been active as professional journalists in the community for four decades, with Joe Saltzman having won more than 50 awards as a broadcast journalist including the Columbia University-duPont broadcast journalism award, four Emmys, four Golden Mikes, two Edward R. Murrow Awards, a Silver Gavel, and one of the first NAACP Image Awards, and Barbara Saltzman having been a member of the Los Angeles Times staff for 22 years and editor of the daily Calendar section.

When their son David, a Chaddick School graduate, tragically died of Hodgkin’s disease after graduating from Yale, Joe and Barbara could have turned their backs on the world. Instead, they mortgaged their house to keep a promise they had made to David. They promised that if he finished his children’s book, The Jester Has Lost His Jingle, they would make sure it would be published in the way he envisioned it. David Saltzman taught children who were suffering from illnesses. Joe and Barbara made that promise a reality producing more than 40,000 Jester books and 35,000 Jester & Pharley Dolls that have been donated to ill and special-needs children. The book has also become a national bestseller and there are more than 300,000 copies in circulation. To further their efforts, Joe and Barbara Saltzman have created The Jester & Pharley Phund, a non-profit charity so that they can continue the mission of giving every child a sense of hope, a feeling of empowerment, a love of learning, the joy of laughter, and the desire to live up to The Jester & Pharley’s motto: “It’s up to us to make a difference, it’s up to us to care.”

Barbara has become “The Jester’s Mom” bringing the Jester & Pharley’s message of hope and laughter to thousands of children in hospitals and schools throughout the country. Joe has served the community as a professor of journalism at the University of Southern California Annenberg School for Communication for more than 35 years and continues to serve as an educator, academic, journalist and administrator.

Mr. Speaker, Joe and Barbara Saltzman have dedicated their lives to helping children who need to hear the Jester’s message and have made a significant difference in the lives of so many. We must find hope and laughter. I commend their commitment in bringing a little more happiness to all our lives.

TRIBUTE TO CARDINAL WILFRID NAPIER, OFM, OF DURBAN, SOUTH AFRICA AND THE ARCHDIOCESE OF DETROIT

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the Archdiocese of Detroit, which has joined with the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops and Catholic Relief Services to stand in solidarity with Africa through the Africa Rising: Hope and Healing Campaign. Encouraging members of the Metro Detroit Catholic community to engage in advocacy, dialogue, and prayer, they have joined this campaign to truly put their faith to work. On Sunday, June 30, 2002, the Archdiocese of Detroit had the distinguished honor of hosting Cardinal Wilfrid Napier, OFM, of Durban, South Africa, as part of their Africa Rising: Hope and Healing Campaign.

Born in Matatiele, South Africa, in 1941, Cardinal Napier studied in Ireland and France and completed a Masters Degree inPhilosophy and Theology. Ordained a priest in 1970 and then appointed Administrator Apostolic of the Diocese of Kokstad and made Bishop of Kokstad in 1984. His voice and leadership was apparent from the start. Serving two terms as President of the Southern African Catholic Bishops’ Conference from 1987–1994, Cardinal Napier went on to be appointed Archbishop of Durban in 1992. In 1998 Pope John Paul II appointed him as Consulter to the Congregation for the Evangelization of the Peoples, and in February of 2001, he was named Cardinal. An outspoken advocate for HIV–AIDS treatment, poverty eradication and development, Cardinal Napier’s outstanding work to create innovative new programs and initiatives for these social justice issues is truly unparalleled. He has taken up the challenge to fight for the people of sub-Saharan Africa and continues to work hard for the advancement of his region and beyond.

I applaud Cardinal Napier for the work he has accomplished and continues to do, and I welcome him to the United States and to Detroit, Michigan. I also applaud the Archdiocese of Detroit for its leadership, commitment, and service, and for encouraging our community to stand in solidarity with our brothers and sisters in Africa. I urge my colleagues to join me in saluting Cardinal Napier, and pay tribute to him as he embarks on this historic visit.

THE FREE HOUSING MARKET ENHANCEMENT ACT

HON. RON PAUL
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce the Free Housing Market Act. This legislation restores a free market in housing by repealing special privileges for the housing-related government sponsored enterprises (GSE). These entities are the Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae), the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation (Freddie Mac), and the National Home Loan Bank Board. According to the Congressional Budget Office, the housing-related GSEs received 13.6 billion worth of indirect federal subsidies in Fiscal Year 2000 alone.

One of the major government privileges granted the GSEs is the line of credit to the United States Treasury. According to some estimates, the line of credit may be worth over $2 billion dollars. This explicit promise by the Treasury to bail out the GSEs in times of economic difficulty helps the GSEs attract investors who are willing to settle for lower yields than they would demand in the absence of the subsidy. Thus, the line of credit distorts the allocation of capital. More importantly, the line of credit is a promise on behalf of the government to engage in a massive unconstitutional and immoral income transfer from working Americans to holders of GSE debt.

The Free Housing Market Enhancement Act also repeals the explicit grant of legal authority given to the Federal Reserve to purchase the debt of the GSE. GSEs are the only institutions besides the United States Treasury granted explicit statutory authority to monetarize their debt through the Federal Reserve. This provision gives the GSEs a source of liquidity unavailable to their competitors.

Ironically, by transferring the risk of a widespread mortgage default, the government increases the likelihood of a catastrophic crash in the housing market. This is because the special privileges of Fannie and Freddie have distorted the housing market by allowing Fannie,
Freddie and the home loan bank board to attract capital they could not attract under pure market conditions. As a result, capital is diverted from its most productive use into housing. This reduces the efficacy of the entire market and thus reduces the standard of living of all Americans.

However, despite the long-term damage to the economy inflicted by the government's interference in the housing market, the government's policies of diverting capital to other uses creates a short-term boom in housing. Like all artificially-created bubbles, the boom in housing prices cannot last forever. When housing prices fall, homeowners will experience difficulty as their equity is wiped out. Furthermore, the holders of the mortgage debt will also have a loss. These losses will be greater than they would have otherwise been had government policy not actively encouraged over-investment in housing.

Perhaps the Federal Reserve can stave off the day of reckoning by purchasing the GSE's debt and pumping liquidity into the housing market, but this cannot hold off the inevitable drop in the housing market forever. In fact, postponing the necessary, but painful market corrections will only deepen the inevitable fall. The more people invested in the market, the greater the effects across the economy when the bubble bursts.

No less an authority than Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan has expressed concern that the government subsidies provided to the GSEs make investors underestimate the risk of investing in Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac.

Mr. Speaker, it is time for Congress to act to remove taxpayer support from the housing GSEs before the bubble bursts and taxpayers are once again forced to bail out investors who where misled by foolish government interference in the market. I therefore hope my colleagues will stand up for American taxpayers and investors by co-sponsoring the Free Housing Market Enhancement Act.

INTRODUCTION OF THE DEFICIT REDUCTION SAFEGUARD RESOLUTION

HON. JOHN SULLIVAN OF OKLAHOMA IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce the Deficit Reduction Safeguard Resolution. The House Deficit Reduction Safe-guard Resolution will allow Members of Congress to reduce the federal deficit by crediting money to the Deficit Reduction Safeguard Balance.

Under current budget and House Rules, when a Member offers an amendment to reduce spending the money saved is left on the table. American taxpayers for someone else to spend on another program. Members are not allowed to offer amendments and direct the savings to deficit reduction. As a result, there is little incentive to reduce wasteful spending in order to reduce the deficit.

The Deficit Reduction Safeguard Balance would correct this problem by amending House Rules to permit a Member to dedicate the money saved from any amendment to be dedicated to reducing the deficit. The Deficit Reduction Safeguard Balance only amends House Rules. It does not require approval by the Senate. This Resolution applies to both mandatory and discretionary spending. We have maxed out Uncle Sam's credit card and until we pay down the debt it is shortsighted for us to continue spending without restraint.

This Resolution is both honest with the American public. A dollar saved should actually be a dollar saved, not a dollar added to another program. I urge my colleagues to co-sponsor this Resolution.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. TODD TIAHRT OF KANSAS IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, July 12, I was unavoidably detained and missed roll call vote number 295. Rollcall vote 295 was on passage of H.R. 4687, legislation which would provide for the establishment of investigative teams to assess building performance and emergency response and evacuation procedures in the wake of any building failure that has resulted in substantial loss of life or that posed significant potential of substantial loss of life.

Had I been present, I would have voted "yea" on this bill.

TRIBUTE TO DIOCESE BISHOP CHARLES M. LASTER 20TH PASTORAL ANNIVERSARY PENTECOSTAL TEMPLE CHURCH

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR OF MICHIGAN IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, as the congregation of the Pentecostal Temple Church gathered together on Sunday July 14, 2002, they celebrated the 20th Pastoral Anniversary of Diocese Bishop Charles M. Laster. A life-long leader and devoted pastor, Bishop Laster has truly demonstrated his commitment to advancing the mission of Pentecostal Temple Church across southeastern Michigan. As the members and friends of Bishop Laster and Elect Lady Jacqueline Laster gathered to celebrate this special anniversary, they paid tribute to their outstanding years of activism, leadership, and faith.

Bishop Laster has been preaching the Gospel to the congregation of Pentecostal Temple Church, located in Detroit Michigan, since 1982. As his glorious message and ministry has been received, he has shown a special dedication to making a positive difference in the lives of others. An active force in his community, he has worked tirelessly with the Pentecostal Temple Church throughout the years in organizing several programs and ministries as well as working with many organizations around the State of Michigan. With community outreach programs, social and religious events, charity work, offer those in need and statewide and national conferences, his involvement with church and beyond has been an inspiration to all. In fact, Bishop Laster’s leadership has truly become a legacy, as he has led his congregation and community to greatness.

Bishop Laster’s distinguished service and outstanding dedication to improving the lives of people through faith will continue to serve as an example to communities across this Nation. I applaud Bishop Laster for his leadership, commitment, and service, and I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring him for his exemplary years of faith and service on this very special 20th Pastoral Anniversary.

H.R. 5017

SPEECH OF HON. BETTY McCOLLUM OF MINNESOTA IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Tuesday, July 9, 2002

Ms. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5017, a bill that creates an opportunity for the United States to implement agreements with foreign countries to assist us as we battle severe wildfires.

During the devastating wildfires two years ago, both Australia and New Zealand provided the United States much needed help. Following the 2000 fire season, long-term agreements for firefighting assistance were negotiated with these countries. Unfortunately, these agreements have not been implemented because of concerns that foreign firefighters could be held liable for actions taken while providing assistance in the United States. H.R. 5017 removes this barrier and extends liability protection to foreign firefighters providing service to our nation by treating them the same as U.S. employees. At the same time, it requires those countries with which we enter reciprocal firefighting agreements to extend the same protection to U.S. firefighters who lend support overseas, or across our borders.

The valuable assistance firefighters from other countries provide to the United States is not new. For years, the collaborative relationship we have developed with Canada has protected property, resources and lives. Forest fires do not recognize international boundaries. It is vital we continue to work with other countries to ensure that wild fires are prevented and contained.

Just last week lightning started a 450-acre wildfire in the northeast corner of Minnesota, north of the small town of Hovland. Since the risk of wildfire is low in Minnesota, much of the state’s firefighting resources had been sent west to help with the forest fires there leaving us shorthanded. Because of our close working relationship with Ontario’s natural resource agency, Canadian firefighters were able to bring the Hovland fire quickly under control.

Unfortunately, not every country has the unique and special relationship that the United States has with Canada in fighting wildfires. H.R. 5017 will allow the U.S. Government to develop similar firefighting relationships with other countries around the world and enhance the relationship we have with one of our neighbors. We must help each other. I am pleased the House addressed this issue today and am proud to lend my support.
REGARDING H.R. 5068, ALLOWING UNINSURED WOMEN TO OBTAIN TREATMENT FOR OVARIAN AND UTERINE CANCER

HON. PATSY T. MINK
OF HAWAII
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 15, 2002

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, Congress passed the Breast and Cervical Cancer Treatment Act (P.L. 106–354) to help low-income, uninsured women with breast and cervical cancer.

Before passing this act, low-income women could receive free mammograms and pap smears through the CDC’s National Breast and Cervical Cancer Early Detection Program. However, women who were diagnosed with cancer could not obtain financial assistance for treatment. The government found diseases that could kill these women, but it did not help them obtain the medical treatment they needed.

P.L. 106–354 corrected this problem by providing federal funds to treat any breast or cervical cancer detected by the CDC’s early detection program.

Congress passed P.L. 106–354 so poor women suffering from breast and cervical cancer could focus on dealing with their illness rather than paying for expensive medical bills. The law allows these women to obtain medical coverage for cancer treatments and medicine.

My bill, H.R. 5086, amends the Breast and Cervical Cancer Treatment Act to include ovarian and uterine cancer. It will provide medical treatment for women who are screened by the CDC’s early detection program and who are found to have ovarian and uterine cancer.

My bill takes the next logical step by helping low-income women with ovarian and uterine cancer, two of the most devastating cancers faced by women. Ovarian cancer is the 5th leading cause of cancer death in women. Every year almost 40,000 new cases of uterine cancer are diagnosed in the U.S., and approximately 6,600 women will die from uterine cancer.

I urge my colleagues to help women who live in poverty and cannot obtain the cancer treatments they desperately need.

TO HONOR MR. VINCENT ROIG FOR HIS MERITORIOUS ACHIEVEMENTS

HON. ED PASTOR OF ARIZONA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. PASTOR. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise before you today and take this opportunity to recognize the meritorious achievements of an outstanding Arizonan and American, Mr. Vincent Roig.

Mr. Roig has distinguished himself as a leader in the essential work of providing educational opportunities for qualified citizens. From his early years as an educator and financial aid administrator at a number of universities, he dedicated himself to helping young people gain the knowledge and skills that they would need throughout their life.

In 1982, he was one of the founders of the Arizona Educational Loan Marketing Corporation, the state’s secondary market for Federal student loans, which is now an affiliate of the Southwest Student Services Corporation.

Although the Congress of the United States had the foresight to create the Federal Family Education Loan Program, it takes the leadership and dedication of a person such as Mr. Roig, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Southwest Student Services Corporation, to effectively implement the Congress’ intended goal. The Southwest Companies initially supported only students at Arizona colleges and universities. However, to date, they have provided more than $3 billion to more than one million parents and students nationally in support of providing financial access to post-secondary education.

Under the initiative and leadership of Mr. Roig, not only have the Southwest Companies facilitated the availability of student financial support, they have reduced costs to the borrowers and provided the critically important informational services that ensure that low-income families understand that educational opportunity is available to them. Mr. Roig has worked tirelessly with the U.S. Department of Education, Congressional Subcommittees and the many organizations supporting student financial assistance to bring about useful change and modernization to improve service to educational institutions and students alike. In recognition of his efforts, in 2001 he was awarded the Jean S. Frohlicher Outstanding Service Award by the National Council of Higher Education Programs. This is a prestigious award for which he was chosen by his peers for his exceptional service.

Today, on the occasion of the celebration of Southwest Companies’ 20th Anniversary, I ask my colleagues to join me in extending our heartiest congratulations to Southwest Student Services Corporation and to Mr. Vincent Roig for his 20 years of leadership and dedication.

The community of Ray Township has dedicated its time and talents to bring its community into the 21st Century, and they have been successful. While continuing to progress, Ray Township’s roots will forever be memorialized by the Historical Plaque that will be unveiled at the anniversary celebration. The plaque will represent the First Religious Society of Ray built in 1869, currently the township’s Town Hall, and the Ray Township District School House of 1863, currently the township’s library. Because of this community unwavering support throughout its remarkable history, Ray Township has become a place that will continue to cultivate its historic roots as well as reach out to younger generations.

Ray Township is a true testament to the hard work and dedication of community members and their families. I applaud the people of Ray Township for their leadership, commitment, and service, and I urge my colleagues to join me in congratulating them on this landmark occasion.
