a moment, against public opinion, to set the gold standard and set us apart. We have been known as the nation of Nuremberg. My fear is now we will be known as the nation of Guantanamo, and I worry about that.

Mr. WARNER. We have our differences, if I may say, but that was a war of state-sponsored nations and aggression, men wearing uniforms, men acting at the direction of recognized governments. Today’s war is a disparate bunch of terrorists, coming overnight, no uniforms, no principles, guided by nothing. We are doing the best we can as a nation, under the direction of our President, to defend ourselves.

Mr. DODD. If our colleagues would yield, I do not disagree, but I don’t think there is a choice between upholding the principles of America and fighting terrorism. Every generation of Americans will face their own threats. This is ours. Every previous generation faced serious threats, and they did not abandon the principles upon which this country is founded. I am fearful we are going to do that today.

Mr. WARNER. I disagree with my friend, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader.

Mr. REID. For this little conclusion, I will use leader time. I ask unanimous consent that 5 minutes from Senator Rockefeller and Senator Kennedy—they both have a half an hour on their respective amendments—be transferred to Senators Clinton and John Kerry. They will each have 5 minutes to speak. And that I have 12 minutes under my control remaining on the bill and that time be equally divided between Senators Feingold and Fein.

Mr. WARNER. They will each have 6 minutes to speak on the bill.

Mr. WARNER. Madam President, preserving the right to object, and I will not object, but I listened carefully. You courteously advised me that this request works within the confines of the standing unanimous consent, is my understanding, in terms of the allocation of time.

Mr. REID. This adds no time to the bill.

Mr. WARNER. That is correct. I wanted to make that clear to my colleagues.

Mr. LEAHY. Reserving the right to object. I shall not, of course. As a matter of clarification, there is still some specific time reserved to the Senator from Vermont: is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There remains 23 minutes on the bill.

Mr. REID. That is 23 minutes, plus the good offices of Senator Specter may give the Senator additional time.

Mr. LEAHY. Thank you.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

MILITARY COMMISSIONS ACT OF 2006

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will reconsider consideration of S. 3930, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3930) to authorize trial by military commission for violations of the law of war, and for other purposes.

Pending:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. Madam President, just for purposes of advising colleagues, there remains on the Specter amendment 16 minutes under the control of the Senator from Virginia. I desire to allocate about 4 minutes to Senator Kyl, 2 to 3 minutes to Senator Sessions, and to wrap it up, 2 to 3 minutes to Senator Graham. But we will alternate or do as the Senator from Michigan—you have 33 minutes. I believe, under the control of Senator Specter and those in support of his amendment.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, parliamentary inquiry: How much time is remaining to Members on this side, including on the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator Specter’s side controls 33 minutes.

Mr. LEVIN. On the Democratic side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator Warner controls 16 minutes, and the proponent of the amendment controls 33.

Mr. LEVIN. And on the bill itself, is there time left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator Reid has allocated the remainder of the debate time on the bill itself.

Mr. LEVIN. All time is allocated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Correct.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to proceed for 30 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, I wish to thank the Senator from Connecticut for one of the most passionate statements I have ever heard on this floor—heartfelt, right on target. The distinctions made in this bill which will allow statements to be admitted into evidence that cruel and inhuman treatment is unconscionable. It is said that, well, statements made after December 30 of 2005 won’t be allowed, but those that are produced by cruel and inhuman treatment prior to December 30 of 2005 are OK. It is unconscionable. It is unheard of. It is untenable, and the Senator from Connecticut has pointed it out very accurately, brightly. I thank him for his statement.

Mr. WARNER. Madam President, we will proceed on Specter’s amendment. In due time to comment on my colleague’s 30 seconds. I want to keep this thing in an orderly progression. I would like to add the Senator from Texas, Mr. Cornyn, in the unanimous consent agreement to be recognized as one of the wrap-up speakers on those in opposition to the amendment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona is recognized.

Mr. KYL. Madam President, yesterday Senator Specter argued that one sentence in the Hamdi opinion that refers to habeas corpus rights as applying to all “individuals” inside the United States indicates that alien enemy combatants have constitutional habeas rights when they are held inside this country. I believe that Senator Specter is incorrect, for the following reasons: (1) The Hamdi plurality repeatedly makes clear that “the threshold question before us is whether the Executive has the authority to detain citizens who qualify as ‘enemy combatants.’” The plurality expressly frames the issue before it in terms of the rights of citizens no fewer than eight times. It is clear that it is only the rights of citizens that the Hamdi plurality studied and ruled on. (2) Elsewhere the Hamdi plurality criticized a rule that would entrench the President’s right to hold someone as an enemy combatant turn on whether they are held inside or outside of the United States. The plurality characterized such a rule as creating “pervasive incentives,” noted that it would simply encourage the military to hold detainees abroad, and concluded that it should not create a “determinative constitutional difference.” The same effect would, of course, be felt if enemy soldiers’ habeas rights were made turn on whether they were held inside or outside of the United States. The fact that the Hamdi plurality rejected this type of geographical gamesmanship in one context casts doubt on the theory that it endorsed it in a closely related context. (3) Had Hamdi extended habeas rights to alien enemy combatants held inside the United States, that would have been a major ruling of tremendous consequence. Because courts typically do not hide elephants in mouseholes, if Whitman v. ATA, it is fair to conclude that no such groundbreaking ruling is squirreled away in one ambiguous sentence in the Hamdi plurality opinion on the floor Wednesday evening. I presented the argument that the concept of habeas corpus does not extend to alien enemy soldiers held during wartime. Senator Specter responded by quoting from a passage in Justice O’Connor’s plurality opinion in Hamdi v. Rumsfeld, 542 U.S. 507 (2004), that he believes establishes that alien combatants are entitled to habeas rights if they are held within the United States. That statement, towards the beginning of section III.A of the court’s opinion, is a part of a statement of general principles—nothing more. That, absent suspension, habeas corpus remains available to every “individual” within the United States. Senator SPECTER reads this statement, unadorned by any qualification as to whether the individual in question is a U.S. citizen, an illegal immigrant, or an alien enemy combatant, to stand for the proposition that even the latter has a constitutional right to habeas corpus when held within the United States. I would suggest that this single, ambiguous statement cannot be construed to bear that much weight, for three reasons.

Elsewhere in its opinion, the Hamdi plurality repeatedly makes clear that the only issue it is actually considering is whether a U.S. citizen has habeas and due process rights as an enemy combatant. The plurality’s emphasis on citizenship is repeatedly made clear throughout Justice O’Connor’s opinion. For example, on page 509, in its first sentence, the plurality opinion says: “we are of the view that the constitutionality of the detention of a United States citizen on United States soil as an ‘enemy combatant’ and to address the process that is constitutionally owed to one who seeks to challenge his detention as such.” On page 516, the plurality again notes: “The threshold question before us is whether the Executive has the authority to detain citizens who qualify as ‘enemy combatants.’” On page 532, the plurality once again emphasizes: “there remains the question of whether process is constitutionally owed to a citizen who disputes his enemy-combatant status.” On page 531: “We reaffirm today the fundamental constitutional 531: “We reaffirm today the fundamental constitutional sanction of habeas corpus remains available to every individual whether the individual in question is a U.S. citizen, an illegal immigrant, or an alien enemy combatant, to stand for the proposition that even the latter has a constitutional right to habeas corpus when held within the United States. I would suggest that this single, ambiguous statement cannot be construed to bear that much weight, for three reasons.

Buttsness my argument is the Rasul v. Bush case where it applied specifically to aliens; and it is true that the consideration was under the statute, section 2241. The Court says that section 2241 “draws no distinction between Americans and aliens held in Federal custody.”

That again buttresses the argument I have made in two respects. First, Rasul specifically grants habeas corpus, albeit restricted to aliens and says there is no distinction. So on the face of the explicit language of the Supreme Court of the United States there is a constitutional requirement, and it is fundamental that Congress cannot legislate in contradiction to a constitutional interpretation of the Supreme Court. That requires a constitutional amendment—not legislation.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields the floor? The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, how much time remains under my control?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty minutes.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Thank you, Madam President. If I require further time beyond 10 minutes I will take time from that reserved to the Senator from Vermont.

Let’s understand exactly what we are talking about here. There are approximately 12 million lawful permanent residents in the United States today. Some came here initially the way my grandpa came from Ireland. I don’t know, my wife’s parents did. These are people who work for American firms, they raise American kids, they pay American taxes.

Section 7 of the bill before us represents a choice about how to treat them. This bill could have been restricted to traditional notions of enemy combatants—foreign fighters captured on the battlefield—but the drafters of this bill chose not to do so.

Let’s be very clear. Once we get past all of the sloganeering, all the fundraising letters, all the sound bites, all the short headlines in the paper, let’s be clear about the choice the bill makes. Let’s be absolutely clear about what it says to lawful permanent residents of the United States. Then let’s decide if it is the right message to send them and if it is really the face of America that we want to show.

Take an example. Imagine you are a law-abiding, lawful, permanent resident, and in your spare time you do charity work to help international relief agencies to lend a helping hand in disasters. You send money abroad to those in need. You are selective in the charities you support, but you do not discriminate on the grounds of religion. Then one day there is a knock on your door. The Government thinks that the Muslim charity you sent money to may be funneling money to terrorists and thinks you may be involved. They go to your neighbor who saw a group of Muslims come to your House has reported “suspicious behavior.” You are brought in for questioning.

Initially, you are not very worried. After all, you live in America. You are innocent, and you have faith in American justice. You know your rights, and you say: I would like to talk to a lawyer. But no lawyer comes. Once again, since you know your rights, you refuse to answer any further questions. Then the interrogators get angry. Then comes solitary confinement, then fierce dogs, then freezing cold that induces hypothermia, then waterboarding, then threats of being sent to a country where you will be tortured, then Guantanamo. And then nothing, for years, for decades, for the rest of your life.

That may sound like an experience from some oppressive and authoritarian regime, something that may have happened under the Taliban, something that Saddam Hussein might have ordered or something out of Kafka. There is a reason why that does not and cannot happen in America. It is because we have a protection called habeas corpus, a word that the Latin phrase by which it has been known throughout our history, call it access to the independent Federal courts to review the authority and the legality by which the Government has taken and is holding someone in custody. It is a fundamental protection. It is woven into the fabric of our Nation. Habeas corpus provides a remedy against arbitrary detentions and constitutional violations. It guarantees an opportunity to go to court, with the aid of a lawyer, to prove that, yes, you are innocent.

As Justice Scalia stated in the Hamdi case:

The very core of liberty secured by the Anglo-Saxon system of separated powers has been freedom from indefinite imprisonment at the will of the Executive.

Of course, the remedy that secures that most basic freedom is habeas corpus.

Habeas corpus does not give you any new rights, it just guarantees you have a chance to ask for your basic freedom.

If we pass this bill today, that will be gone for the 12 million lawful, permanent residents of this life and work among us, or if you do not like it, what a bureaucratic term, to determine your basic human rights, “any alien awaiting”—a Government determination as to whether the alien is an enemy combatant. The Government may declare anyone free to delay as long as it liked—for years, for decades, for the length of the conflict which is so undefined and may last for generations.

One need only look at Guantanamo. Despite our own Government’s own determination that a number of people are in there by mistake, but we will not get around to making that determination. Maybe in 5 years, maybe 10, maybe 20, maybe 30. And we wonder why some of our closest allies and friends ask us, what in heaven’s name has happened to the conscience and moral compass of this great Nation? Are we so terrified of some terrorists around this country that we will run scared and hide? Is that what we will do, tear down all the structures of liberty in this country because we are so frightened?

It brings to mind that famous passage in “A Man for All Seasons.” Thomas More is talking to his protege, William Roper, regarding to the effect that England is planted thick like a forest with laws. He said, Would you cut down those laws to get after the devil? And Roper said, of course I would cut down all the laws in England to get the devil. And then More said, Oh, and when the last law was down and the devil turned on you, what will protect you?
This legislation is cutting down laws that protect all 100 of us, and now almost 300 million Americans. It is amazing the Senate would be talking about doing something such as this, especially after the example of Guantanamo. We can pick up people intentionally or by mistake and hold them forever.

How many speeches have I heard in my 32 years in the Senate during the cold war and after, criticizing totalitarian governments that do things such as this? And we can shamefully and proudly say it would never happen in America; this would never happen in America because we have rights, we have habeas corpus, and people are protected.

I am not here speculating about what the bill says. This is not a critic's characterization of the bill. It is what the bill plainly says, on its face. It is what the Bush-Cheney administration is demanding. It is what any Member who votes against the Specter-Leahy amendment and for the bill today is going to be endorsing.

The habeas stripping provisions in the bill go far beyond what Congress did in the Detainee Treatment Act in three respects as the Supreme Court pointed out in Hamdan, the DTA removed habeas jurisdiction only prospectively, for future cases. This new bill strips habeas jurisdiction retroactively, even for pending cases. This is an extraordinary action that runs counter to long-held U.S. policies disfavoring retroactive legislation.

Second, the DTA applied only to detainees at Guantanamo. This new legislation goes far beyond Guantanamo and strips the right to habeas of any alien living in the United States if the alien has been determined an enemy combatant, or even if he is awaiting a determination—and that wait can take years and years and years. Then, 20 years later, you can say: We made a mistake. Tough. It allows holding an alien, any alien, forever, without the right of habeas corpus, while the Government makes up its mind as to whether he is an enemy combatant.

And third, the impact of those provisions is extended by the new definition of enemy combatant proposed in the current bill. The bill extends the definition to include persons who supported hostilities against the United States, even if they did not engage in armed conflict against the United States or its allies. That, again, is an extraordinary extension of existing laws.

If we vote today to abolish rights of access to the justice system to any alien detainee who is suspected—not determined, not even charged; these people are not even charged, just suspected—of assisting terrorists, that will do by the back door what cannot be done up front. That will remove the power of habeas to stop the Government from overreaching and lawlessness.

This is so wrong. It grieves me, after three decades in this Senate, to stand here knowing we are thinking of doing this. It is so wrong. It is unconstitutional. It is un-American. It is designed to ensure the administration will never again be embarrassed by a U.S. Supreme Court decision reviewing its unlawful abuses of power. The Supreme Court said, you abused your power. And they said, we will fix that. Congress will enact a bill that will set that aside and give us power that nobody—not king or anyone else setting foot in this land—had ever thought of having.

In fact, the irony is this conservative Supreme Court—seven out of nine members are Republicans—has been the only check on the Bush-Cheney administration because Congress has not had the courage to do that. Congress has not had the courage to uphold its own oath of office.

With this bill, the Congress will have completed the job of eviscerating its role as a check and balance on the administration. The Senate has turned its back on the Warner-Levin bill, a bipartisan bill reported by the Committee on Armed Services, so it can jam through the Bush-Cheney bill. This bill gives up the ghost. It is not a check on the administration but a voucher for future wrongdoing.

Abolishing habeas corpus for anyone the Government thinks might have assisted enemies of the United States is unnecessary and morally wrong, a betrayal of the most basic values of freedom for which America stands. It makes a mockery of the Bush-Cheney administration's lofty rhetoric about exporting freedom across the globe. We can export freedom across the globe, but we will cut it out in our own country. What hypocrisy.

I read yesterday from former Secretary of State Colin Powell's letter in which he voiced concern about our ability to go against terrorism. The general and former head of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and former Secretary of State was right.

Admiral John Hutton testified before the Judiciary Committee that stripping the courts of habeas corpus jurisdiction was inconsistent with our history and our tradition. The admiral concluded:

We don't need to do this. America is too strong.

When we do this, America will not be a stronger nation. America will be a weaker nation, because we weakened the courts of habeas corpus jurisdiction because we turned our back on our Constitution. We turned our back on our rights. We turned our back on our history.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a letter from more than 60 law school deans and professors who state that the Congress would gravely disserve our global reputation by doing this.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

SEPTEMBER 27, 2006.

To United States Senators and Members of Congress:

The undersigned law deans and professors, write in our individual capacity to express our deep concern about two bills that are rapidly moving through Congress. These bills, the Military Commissions Act and the National Security Surveillance Act, would make the indefinite detention of those labeled as enemy combatants, the Government's program of domestic surveillance effectively unreviewable by any independent judge sitting in public session. While different in character, both bills unwise contract the jurisdiction of courts and deprive them of the ability to decide critical issues that must be subject to judicial review in any free and democratic society.

Although the Military Commissions Act of 2006 (S. 3929/S. 3930) was drafted to improve and codify military commission procedures following the Supreme Court's June 2006 decision in Hamdan v. Rumsfeld, it summarily eliminates the right of habeas corpus for those detained by the Government who have been or may be deemed to be enemy combatants: Detainees will have no ability to challenge the conditions of their detention or to test the legality of their detention in a court unless the administration decides to try them before a military commission. Those who are not tried will have no recourse to any independent court at any time. Enacting this provision into law would be a grievous error. As several witnesses testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee on Monday, Article I, Section 9 of the Constitution provides that the Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it, "conditions that are plainly not satisfied here.

Similarly, the National Security Surveillance Act of 2006 (S. 3876) would strip courts of jurisdiction over pending cases challenging the legality of the administration's domestic spying program and would transfer those cases to the court established by the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978 (FISA). The transfer of these cases to a secret court that issues secret decisions would shield the administration's electronic surveillance program from effective and transparent judicial scrutiny.

These bills exhibit a profound and unwarranted distrust of the judiciary. The historic role of the courts is to ensure that the legislative promulgates and the executive faithfully executes the law of the land with due respect for the rights of even the most despised. Any protections embodied in these bills would be rendered worthless unless the courts can hold the executive accountable to the rule of law. Moreover, the bills ignore a central teaching of the Supreme Court's decision in Hamdan v. Rumsfeld: the importance of shared institutional powers and checks and balances in crafting laws and sustainable responses to the war on terror. Absent effective judicial review, there will be no way to enforce any of the limitations in these bills that Congress is seeking to place upon the executive's claimed power.

We recognize the need to prevent and punish crimes of terrorism to investigate and prosecute such crimes. But depriving our courts of jurisdiction to determine whether the executive has acted properly when it detains individuals in the United States endangers the rights of our own soldiers and nationals abroad, by limiting our ability to demand that they be provided the protections that we deny to others. Eliminating effective judicial review of executive acts as significant as detention and domestic surveillance cannot be justified by the principles of transparency and rule of law on which our constitutional democracy rests.

The Congress would gravely disserve our global law-enabling country by enacting bills that seek to combat terrorism by stripping judicial review. We respectfully urge you to amend the judicial review provisions of the Military Commissions Act and the National Security Surveillance Act to ensure that the rights granted by those bills will be enforceable and reviewable in a court of law.

the very freedoms that define America? We fought two world wars, we fought a civil war, we fought a revolutionary war, all these wars to protect those rights.

And now, think of those people who have been violated, violations that we fought so hard to protect those rights. What do we do? We sit here, privileged people of the Senate, and we turn our backs on that. We throw away those rights. Why would we allow the terrorists to win over ourselves, that they could never do and abandoning the principles for which so many Americans today and throughout our history have fought and sacrificed? What has happened that the Senate is willing to turn America from a bastion of freedom into a cauldron of suspicion, ruled by a government of unchecked power?

Under the Constitution, a suspension of the writ may only be justified during an invasion or a rebellion, when the public safety demands it. Six weeks after attacks of September 11 we cannot soil in our history, the Congress that passed the PATRIOT Act rightly concluded that a suspension of the writ would not be justified. But now, 6 weeks before a midterm election, the fundraising letters are running around, the Bush-Cheney administration and its supplicants in Congress deem a complete abolition of the writ the highest priority, a priority so urgent that we are allowed no time to properly review, debate, and amend a bill we first saw in its current bill less than 72 hours ago. There must be a lot of fundraising letters going out.

Notwithstanding the harm the administration has done to national security—first by missing their chance to stop September 11 and then with their mismanaged misadventures in Iraq—there is no new national security crisis. Apparently, there is only a Republican political crisis. And that, as we know, is why this un-American, unconstitutional legislation is before us today.

We have a profoundly important and dangerous choice to make today. The danger is not that we adopt a pre-9/11 mentality. We adopted a post-9/11 mentality, and we dismisses the Constitution on which our American freedoms are founded.

Actually, it is worse than that. Habeas corpus was the most basic protection of freedom that Englishmen secured from their King in the Magna Carta. The mentality adopted by this bill, in abolishing habeas corpus for a broad swath of people, is not a pre-9/11 mentality, it is a pre-1215—that is the year, 1215—mentality, a mentality we did away with in the Magna Carta and our Constitution.

Every one of us has sworn an oath to uphold the Constitution. In order to uphold that oath, I believe we have a duty to vote for this amendment—the Specter-Leahy amendment—and against this irresponsible and flagrantly unconstitutional bill. That is what I will do.

The Senator from Vermont answers to the Constitution and to his conscience. I do not answer to political pressure.

Madam President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. Madam President, we have colleagues on this side who are ready to proceed. Now, there is a great deal of time left on the other side, but in order of preference, I say to Senator Sessions, if you are ready to proceed.

Mr. SESSIONS. Madam President, I will be pleased to do so.

Mr. WARNER. Madam President, might I inquire of the amount of time under my control for those in opposition to the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator WARNER controls 11 minutes.

Mr. WARNER. Eleven minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator SPECTER controls 20 minutes.

Mr. SESSIONS. Madam President, if the chairman would approve, I would ask for 3 minutes.

Mr. WARNER. Yes. And following that, Senator CORNYN for such time as he may need.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. Madam President, habeas corpus—the right to have your complaints heard while in custody—is a part of our Constitution. But we have to remember habeas corpus did not mean everything in the whole world when it was adopted. So what did “habeas” mean? What does it mean today and at the time it was adopted? It was never, ever, ever intended or imagined, during the War of 1812, if British soldiers were captured burning the Capitol of the United States—as they did—that they would have been given habeas corpus rights. It was never thought to be. Habeas corpus was applied to citizens, really, at that time. I believe that is so plain as to be without dispute.

So to say: Habeas corpus, what does it mean? What did those words mean when the people ratified it? They did not mean that prisoners were attacking the United States of America. We provide special protections for prisoners of war who lawfully conduct a war that might be against the United States. We give them great protections. But unlawful combatants, the kind we are dealing with today, have never been given the full protections of the Geneva Conventions.

Second, my time is limited, and I have been so impressed with the debate that has gone on with Senators Kyl, Specter, and Graham, and I associate myself generally with those remarks, but I want to recall that in a state of an effort to appease critics and those who had “vague concerns,” not too many years ago, this Congress passed legislation that said that CIA-gathered information could not be shared with the FBI. We passed a law in this Congress to appease the left in America, the critics of our efforts against terrorism, and we have put a wall between the CIA and FBI.

So that was politically good. Everybody must have been happy about that. I was not in the Senate then. Then the administration was talking to people who had criminal records who may have been involved in violence, and this was somehow making our CIA complicit in dealing with dangerous people, and we banned that. We passed a statute that eliminated that. And everybody felt real good that we had done something special.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator’s time has expired.

Mr. SESSIONS. After 9/11, we realize both of those were errors of the heart perhaps, but of the brain. And so what happened? We reversed both of them. We reversed them both. And we need to be sure that the legislation we are dealing with today does not create a long-term battle with the courts over everybody who is being detained. That is a function of the military and the executive branch to conduct a war.

Madam President, I yield the floor.

Mr. FEINGOLD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, I understand I have 6 minutes on the bill in general.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, I oppose the Military Commissions Act.

Let me be clear: I welcomed efforts to bring terrorists to justice. Actually, it is about time. This administration has too long been distracted by the war in Iraq from the fight against al-Qaida. We need a renewed focus on the terrorist networks that present the greatest threat to this country.

We would not be where we are today, 5 years after September 11, if not a single Guantanamo Bay detainee hay been brought to trial, if the President had come to Congress in the first place, rather than unilaterally creating military commissions that did not comply with the law. The Hamdan decision was a historic rebuke to an administration that has acted for years as if it is above the law.

I have hoped that we would take this opportunity to pass legislation that allows us to proceed in accordance with our values and our Constitution. What separates America from our enemies. These trials, conducted appropriately, have the potential to demonstrate to the world that our democratic constitutional system of government is our greatest strength in fighting those who attack us.
That is why I am saddened I must oppose this legislation because the trials condemned this legislation. They send a very different signal to the world, one that I fear will put our troops and personnel in jeopardy both now and in future conflicts. To take just a few examples, this legislation would permit an individual to be convicted of coercion of testimony and hearings, would not allow full judicial review of the conviction, and yet would allow someone convicted under these rules to be put to death.
That is just simply unacceptable.
Not only that, this legislation would deny detainees at Guantanamo Bay and elsewhere—people who have been held for years but have not been tried or even charged with any crime—the ability to challenge their detention in court. The legislation before us is better than that originally proposed by the President, which would have largely codified the procedures the Supreme Court has already rejected. And that is thanks to the efforts of some of my Republican colleagues, for whom I have great respect and admiration. But this bill remains deeply flawed, and I cannot support it.
One of the most disturbing provisions of this bill eliminates the right of habeas corpus for those detained as enemy combatants. I support an amendment by Senator SPECTER to strike that provision from the bill.
Habeas corpus is a fundamental recognition that in America the Government does not have the power to detain people indefinitely and arbitrarily. And in America, the courts must have the power to review the legality of executive detention decisions.
This bill would fundamentally alter that historical equation. Faced with an executive branch that has detained hundreds of people without trial for years now, it would eliminate the right of habeas corpus.
Under this legislation, some individuals, at the designation of the executive branch alone, could be picked up, even in the United States, and held indefinitely without trial and without any access whatsoever to the courts.
They would not be able to call upon the laws of our great Nation to challenge their detention because they would have been put outside the reach of the law.
Some have suggested that terrorists who take up arms against this country should not be allowed to challenge their detention in court. But that argument is circular. The writ of habeas allows those who might be mistakenly detained to challenge their detention in court before a neutral decisionmaker. The alternative is to allow people to be indefinitely wrong to say that they are not, in fact—enemy combatants.
There is another reason we must not deprive detainees of habeas corpus, and that is the fact that the American system of government is supposed to set an example for the world as a beacon of democracy.
A group of retired diplomats sent a very moving letter to explain their concerns about this habeas-stripping provision. Here is what they said:
"To proclaim democratic government to the rest of the world as the supreme form of government at the very moment we eliminate the most important avenue of relief from arbitrary governmental detention will not serve our international interests."
Many dedicated patriotic Americans share these grave reservations about this particular provision of this bill.
Unfortunately, the suspension of the Great Writ is not the only problem with this legislation. Unfortunately, I do not have time to discuss them all.
But the bill also appears to permit individuals to be convicted, and even sentenced to death, on the basis of coerced testimony. According to the legislation, statements obtained through cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment, as long as it was obtained prior to December 2005, when the McCain amendment became law, would apparently be admissible in many instances in these military commissions.
Now, it is true that the bill would require the commission to find these statements have sufficient and pro-bative value. But why would we go down this road of trying to convict people who have not been treated through cruel, inhuman, or degrading interrogation techniques? Either we are a nation that stands against this type of cruelty and for the rule of law or we are not. We cannot have it both ways.
In closing, let me do something I do not do very often, and that is quote my former colleague, John Ashcroft. According to the New York Times, in a private meeting of high-level officials in 2003 about the military commission structure, then-Attorney General
Ashcroft reportedly said:
"Timothy McVeigh was one of the worst killers in U.S. history. But at least we had fair procedures for him.
How sad that this Congress would seek to pass legislation about which the same cannot be said."
Mr. President, I strongly support Senator SPECTER’s amendment to strike the habeas provision from this bill.
At its most fundamental, the writ of habeas corpus protects against abuse of government power. It ensures that individuals detained by the government without trial have a method to challenge their detention. Habeas corpus is a fundamental recognition that in America, the government does not have the power to detain people indefinitely and arbitrarily. And that in America, the courts must have the power to review the legality of executive detention decisions.
It goes without saying that this is not a new concept. Habeas corpus is a longstanding vital part of our American tradition, and is enshrined in the U.S. Constitution, article 1, section 9, where it states:
"The Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it."
The Founders recognized the importance of this right. Alexander Hamliton in Federalist Paper No. 84 explained the importance of habeas corpus and its centrality to the American system of government and the concept of personal liberty. He quoted William Blackstone, who warned against the dangerous engine of arbitrary government” that could result from unchal-lengeable confinement, and the “bulworth” of habeas corpus against this abuse of government power.
As a group of retired judges wrote to Congress, habeas corpus “safeguards the most hallowed judicial role in our collective democracy—ensuring that no man is imprisoned unlawfully.”
This bill would fundamentally alter that historical equation. Faced with an administration that has detained hundreds of people without trial for years now, it would eliminate the right of habeas corpus for anyone the executive branch labels an alien “enemy combat-
That’s right. It would eliminate the right of habeas corpus for any alien detained by the United States, anywhere in the world, and designated by the government as an enemy combatant.
And it would do so in the face of years of abuses of power that—thus far—have been reined in primarily through habeas corpus challenges in our Federal courts.
Let me be clear about what it does.
Under this legislation, some individuals, at the designation of the executive branch alone, could be picked up,
even in the United States, and held indefinitely without trial and without any access whatsoever to the courts.
They would not be able to call upon the laws of our great Nation to challenge their detention because they would have been put outside the reach of the law.
That is unacceptable, and it almost surely violates our Constitution. The rule of law is something deeper and more profound than the collection of laws that we have on paper. It is a principle that undergirds our entire society, and that has been central to our nation since its very founding. As Thomas Paine explained at the time of our country’s birth in 1776, the rule of law is that principle, that paramount commitment, “that in America, the law is king and, therein ought to be no other.” The rule of law tells us that no man is above the law—and as an extension of that principle—that no executive will be able to act unchecked by our legal system.
Yet, by stripping the habeas corpus rights of any individual who the executive branch decides to designate as an enemy combatant, that is precisely where we end up—with an executive branch subject to no external check whatsoever. With an executive branch that is king.

Now, it may well be that this provision will be found unconstitutional as an illegitimate modification of the writ of habeas corpus. But that determination will take years of protracted litigation. And for what? The President has been urging Congress to pass legislation so that Khalid Sheikh Mohammed, the alleged mastermind of 9-11, and other “high value” al-Qaida detainees can be tried. This bill is supposed to create a framework for prosecuting unlawful enemy combatants for war crimes that the Supreme Court can accept following the decision this summer in the Hamdan case. There is absolutely no reason why we need to restrict judicial review of the detention of individuals who have not been charged with any crime.

That raises another point. People who are actually subject to trial by military commission will at least be able to argue their innocence before some tribunal, even if I have grave concerns about how those military commissions would proceed under this legislation. If those who have been charged with any crime will have no guaranteed venue in which to proclaim and prove their innocence. As three retired generals and admirals explained in a letter to Congress:

The provision would give greater protections to the likes of Khalid Sheikh Mohammed than to the vast majority of the Guantanamo detainees.

How does this make any sense? Why would we turn our back on hundreds of years of history and our Nation’s commitment to liberty? We have already, in the Detainee Treatment Act, said that no habeas challenges can be brought by detainees at Guantanamo Bay. The Supreme Court, in the Hamdan case, found that the Detainee Treatment Act did not apply to Hamdan’s pending habeas petition, and went forward with considering his argument that the President’s military commission structure was illegal. And I would think that we should all be pleased that it did so, because otherwise we would have had to wait for several more years for Hamdan’s trial to be completed before he would have had any chance to challenge the President’s military commission system in court. The Supreme Court’s decision striking down those commissions would have occurred several years later. And we would be right back where we are now, but with several more years of delay.

There is another reason why we must not deprive detainees of habeas corpus, and that is the fact that the American system of government is supposed to set an example for the world, as a beacon of democracy. And this provision will only serve to harm others’ perception of our system of government.

A group of retired diplomats sent a very moving letter explaining their concerns about this habeas-stripping provision. Here is what they said:

To proclaim democratic government to the rest of the world as the supreme form of government at the very moment we eliminate the most important defense from arbitrary governmental detention will not serve our interests in the larger world.

They went on to explain further:

The perception of hypocrisy on our part—a sense that we demand of others a behavioral ethic we may advocate but fail to observe—is an acid which can overwhelm our diplomacy, no matter how well intended and generous.

That is a strong statement.

Let’s not go down this road. Let’s move this provision from the bill.

As is already clear, I’m not the only one who has serious concerns about this provision. There is bipartisan support for this amendment. And Congress has received numerous letters objecting to the habeas provision, including from Kenneth Starr; a group of former diplomats; two different groups of law professors; a group of retired judges; and a group of retired generals. Many Americans have grave reservations about this particular provision of the bill.

They have reservations not because they sympathize with suspected terrorists. Not because they are soft on national security. But because they don’t understand the threat we face. No, they, and we in the Senate who support this amendment, are concerned about this provision because we care about the Constitution, because we care about the image America presents to the world as we fight the terrorists. Because we know that the writ of habeas corpus provides one of the most significant protections of human freedom against arbitrary government action ever created. If we sacrifice it here, we will head down a road that history will judge harshly and our descendants will regret.

Let me close with something that this group of retired judges said.

For two hundred years, Federal judiciary has maintained Chief Justice Marshall’s solemn admonition that ours is a government of laws, and not of men. The proposed legislation imperils this proud history by abandoning the Great Writ.

Mr. President, we must not imperil our proud history. We must not abandon the Great Writ. We must not jeopardize our Nation’s proud traditions and principles by suspending the writ interfering with our government to pick people up off the street, even in U.S. cities, and detain them indefinitely without court review. That is not what America is about.

Madam President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. CORNYN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent for 3 minutes from our time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CORNYN. First of all, Madam President, I would like to point out there are many myths about this legislation. We need to get to the facts and get to the truth so people can understand what the choices are.

Our distinguished colleague from Wisconsin, in my view, also per¬ moved another myth, purporting this war is all about Iraq, when, in fact, the new leader of al-Qaida in Iraq, succeed¬ ing al-Zarqawi, just reported in an Associated Press story that 4,000 al¬ Qaida foreign fighters have been killed in Iraq due to the war effort. But this is a global war, and it requires a uniformed treatment of the terrorists in a way that reflects our values but also the fact that we are at war.

I think our colleagues need to be reminded of legislation which we passed in December of 2005, known as the Detainee Treatment Act. When people come here and suggest that we are stripping all legal rights from terrorists who are detained at Guantanamo Bay, they are simply flying in the face of the Detainee Treatment Act that we passed in December 2005, which provides not only a review through a com¬ batant status review tribunal, with elaborate procedures to make sure there is a fair hearing, but that a right to appeal to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals, not only to make sure that the right standards were applied—that is, whether the military applied the rights rules to the petition to attack the constitu¬ tionality of the system which they chose to do so. So those who claim we are simply stripping habeas corpus rights are simply flying in the face of the facts as laid out in the Detainee Treatment Act.

Now, the question may be: Are we going to provide what the law requires? Are we going to provide additional rights and privileges that some would like to confer upon these high-value detainees located at Guantanamo Bay? The fact is, the Trump adminis¬ tration of this amendment propose would be to divert our soldiers from the battlefield and to tie their hands in ways with frivolous litigation and ap¬peals. And the last thing that I would think any of us would want to do would be to provide an easy means for terror¬ists to sue U.S. troops in U.S. courts, particularly when it is not required by the Constitution, laws of the United States, not mandated by the Supreme Court, and we have the ade¬ quate substitute remedy, which I be¬ lieve is entirely consistent with the U.S. Supreme Court’s decisions in this area.

We have provided an avenue or a process by which these detainees can have their rights protected, such rights as they have being unlawful combat¬ants attacking innocent civilians. America is conferring rights upon them that we do not have to confer, but we are conferring them because we believe they have the right to be in this process, and we ought to be consistent with our Con¬stitution and with the decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court.
The last thing I would think any of us would want to do would be to tie the hands of our soldiers to permit terrorists to sue U.S. troops in Federal court at will.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Ensign). The Senator's time has expired. The Senator from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for 10 minutes from Senator Wagner on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I appreciate the opportunity to talk generally about the need for all of us to have already spoken about the importance of not affording habeas corpus to the unlawful combatants when they have more protections than international law requires, or than any other country provides.

Speaking on the bill, for the last 5 years, our most important job has been to protect our families from another terrorist attack.

Our children, our mothers, fathers, grandparents and children—none of them deserved to die in the 9/11 attacks; none deserve to die in another terrorist attack. That is why we are doing everything we can to protect our families by stopping terrorists, capturing them, learning their secrets, following their plots, and bringing the terrorists to justice.

Through our hard work, there has not been another direct attack on U.S. soil since 9/11. We have worked hard to prevent and stop attacks in the last 5 years and must continue to prevent future attacks. We dramatically boosted airport and airline security. We hired new airport screeners, implemented new checks, and even put armed agents on flights where necessary.

We added thousands of new FBI agents, thousands of new intelligence officers, and increased their budgets by billions to provide new armies against terrorism.

We passed the PATRIOT Act to provide the tools needed to discover terrorist plots and stop them. We reorganized our intelligence agencies to bring a single focus and purpose against terrorism. We tore down the walls between law enforcement and intelligence to get terror planning and plot information to authorities as quick as possible.

All of this is going on as I speak, as we sleep at night, as our children go to school, as we are fighting the war on terrorism.

The President recently highlighted some of the successes we have had because of our terror fighting tools and efforts. He recounted how we have captured terrorists, used new tools to learn their secrets, captured additional terrorists, connected the dots of their conspiracies, and foiled their terror attack plans.

But now some want to tie the hands of our terror fighters, they want to take away the tools we use to fight terror—handcuff us, hamper us—in our fight to protect our families.

It’s not new, really. Partisans have slowed our efforts to fight terror every step of the way.

Many on the other side voted against the PATRIOT Act. Many block the reauthorization of the PATRIOT Act for months. The Democrat Leader actually boasted, "We killed the PATRIOT Act."

Thank Heavens that wasn’t true. Now, I know that they all love our country. They just don’t understand the terror enemies we face.

These critics are not willing to do what is necessary to protect fully our families from terrorists. You don’t have to take my word for it, just look at their record over the last 5 years. Whether or not you would say terror war critics have a weak record on terror, they have certainly tried, tried, tried, and take away our terror fighting tools.

Some congressional Democrats voted to cut and run from Iraq. Nothing would embolden terrorists more than to see the U.S. turn tail and run home.

Osama bin Laden cited America quitting Somalia, and failing to respond to the U.S.S. Cole bombing, as signs of U.S. weakness and vulnerability. We all know what happened later.

Democrats in the Senate have blocked the appointment of senior anti-terror officials. The 9/11 commission report recommended better coordination between law enforcement and intelligence officials. Only last week did Democrats stop blocking the appointment of the senior Justice Department official for National Security.

Partisans readily spread classified information leaked to the public or the media. They call new conferences to highlight cherry-picked intelligence information, or quote newspaper articles betraying our Nation’s secret terror fighting programs. Don’t they think this encourages the enemy or demoralizes our anti-terrorism effort?

Some propose to handcuff our ability to discover terrorist plots. They propose to make it hard to listen in on a potential terrorist calling from a foreign country, or to a foreign country to discuss terror plans.

If al-Qaida calls in, we ought to be listening. That is authorized under the Constitution. The Constitution clearly gives the President the power to intercept phone calls under the foreign intelligence exception in the Constitution.

In my meetings with intelligence officials both abroad and here at home I have heard repeatedly how the disclosure, not only of classified information, but also of our interrogation techniques, is extremely damaging.

Our personnel have encountered enemy combatants trained to resist disclosed interrogation techniques thanks to leakers in our media.

If we lay out precisely the techniques that will transform them in the Federal Register, they will be in an al-Qaida training manual within 48 hours.

I’m pleased that with the current Military Commissions legislation moving forward, we have clarified our strict adherence to standards that forbid torture in any way, shape or form and we are allowing our CIA to move forward with a humane interrogation program whose techniques have not been published in the Federal Register, or even worse, in another newspaper disclosure.

Critics support trial procedures that would give terrorists secret intelligence information.

Why on Earth would we hand over classified evidence and information to terrorists so that information could be used against us in the future?

Remember the 1993 World Trade Center bombing? The prosecution of terror suspects there involved giving over 200 names of terror suspects to the attorneys representing the terrorists. They gave them in a trial, and some months later, after an investigation of the bombings in Afghanistan, we captured the al-Qaida documents which had all of that information that had been given to the attorneys. So once you give it to a detainee or the detainee’s attorney, you can count on it getting out.

One other thing is important. Some would propose exposing our terror fighters to legal liability. They oppose giving our terror fighters certainty and clarity in how to go about their jobs. They leave them vulnerable to prosecution and handcuff their efforts and leave the rest of us vulnerable to terror plots that went undiscovered.

Right now, these people are worried and they are buying insurance. People who are trying to carry out the very important intelligence missions of the United States, if they ask any questions, or if they don’t give them four square meals a day and keep them in a comfortable motel, they are afraid they are going to get sued. We need to give protection to the people who are operating within the law as we are laying it out to make sure they don’t cross over the line.

The problem we have is that if the critics take away the valuable tools we have in breaking apart terror plots, we are going to be significantly less safe. As the President said, the CIA interrogation program has already succeeded in breaking apart terror conspiracies and preventing several terror attacks. Critics within the program are preventing us from punishing terrorists and gaining valuable information that could prevent future attacks.

One thing I, along with the President and my Republican colleagues, share with the war critics is a strong opposition to torture. It is abhorrent, evil, and has no place in the world. What I oppose is how terror war critics would go soft on terror suspects, allowing them comforts they surely don’t deserve.

Critics are being tough on targets. Terrorists argue that we should treat them like prisoners of war under the Geneva Conventions. Article 72 of the Geneva Conventions on treatment of prisoners of war says POWs shall be allowed to receive parcels containing foodstuffs. Is that what critics think the 9/11 Commission conspirators deserve as treatment? Article 71 says POWs shall be allowed to send and receive letters and cards. Is that what opponents of the bill believe people should be allowed to conspire to cut off our heads—letters from home? “Mail call, Abu al-Shibah...” Article 60 requires us to grant all POWs monthly advances of pay. It says how much: below sergeant, 8 Swiss francs; officers, 50 Swiss francs; generals, 75 Swiss francs.

Do the critics think Khalid Sheikh Mohammed deserves 50 Swiss francs or 75?

Critics of being tough on terrorists say that we should adhere to international standards of decency. Where was the decency when international troops withdrew without a fight from Srebrenica, Bosnia allowing the genocide of its men and boys? What was the decency when the U.N. allowed Sudan, guilty of genocide in Darfur, to serve on the Human Rights Commission, and allowed Cuba to help monitor international human rights? This was neither moral nor decent.

Some say that the tough treatment we are debating will lead to bad treatment of America’s soldiers in the future. That is a close cousin to the argument that if we leave the terrorists alone they will stop attacking us, or that America made them do it. Do we need a reminder of how badly they are already treating us? The Wall Street Journal reporter kidnapped by terrorists, Daniel Pearl, had his head cut off long before the criminal acts of Abu Grahib or news of the CIA prisons.

The charred bodies of our Special Forces dragged through the streets of Mogadishu tell us what the vague standards of the Geneva Convention got us.

As I said before, I support a torture ban. I also support provisions that clearly ban cruel, inhuman treatment or intentionally causing great suffering or serious injury. These are serious felonies, as they should be. But what we cannot do is give up tough treatment short of this that protects our families from attack.

What do critics think would happen if we let terrorists get free? They’d be satisfied with only name, rank and serial number? Would they have us say to our terror suspects, “Oh gosh darn, I was so hoping you would willingly tell us your terror plots. Oh well, here’s your 50 Swiss franc advance pay, don’t go on your cookie care package, we’ve scheduled a dentist appointment for you for Tuesday.”

Of course not, that would be absurd to think that terrorists will willingly tell us their plots. Terror war critics have probably seen too many Law and Order TV shows if they think some hokey good cop—bad cop law enforcement approach will work on al-Qaida.

These people flew airplanes into buildings for heaven’s sake, or should I say for hell’s sake. America must fight with honor. We must fight from the moral high ground. But do not tell me we lack a moral basis for our fight against terror. Show me someone who doubts America’s moral basis in this fight against terror and I will show you someone who has lost their own moral compass. The compassion of America’s soldiers, our families from attack.

The critics think we cannot do is give up tough treatment. That is a close cousin to the argument of America’s soldiers in the future. We must give our terror fighters the tools they need and the protections they require to protect our families from terror.

We cannot fall into the traps our terror war critics suggest: handcuffing our law enforcement and intelligence agents, blocking our terror fighting leadership, releasing and spreading our terror war critics suggest: handcuffing our terror fighters, granting terrorists overly-comfortable protections, going soft on terrorists who hold the secrets of their plots, their attacks.

Our agents deserve better, our soldiers deserve better, our families deserve better.

To start where I began, this is what all our efforts are about. Protecting our vulnerability by protecting our children, protecting our mothers and fathers, protecting grandparents and grandchildren. None of the vulnerable it protects deserved to die in the 9/11 attacks, and none deserve to die again in another terrorist attack.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, we are anxious to move to a vote on the Specter amendment to accommodate a number of colleagues. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. LEVIN. That is not a unanimous consent, is it?

Mr. WARNER. No. Mr. LEVIN. We have three Senators who have been allocated time specifically, and that time may be used relative to the amendment or in general debate on the bill. I will not agree to any restriction of time that the Senator has been allocated.

Mr. WARNER. I recognize that. It is in our mutual interests to move ahead on the bill. There will be time after the vote for Senators to speak. You have 18 hours additional time under my control on general debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, the time for the Senator from California is under which category?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. General debate time.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I strongly believe the true test of a nation comes when we face hard decisions and hard times. It is really not the easy decisions that test our character and our commitment to fundamental principles and values. It is when the easy answers flitter at the right answer, but is politically expedient.

We face one of those times right now. The war against terror has challenged our country to fight a nontraditional enemy—one that is not part of any international treaty. The enemy does not wear a uniform, it has no code of ethics, and it relishes in the killing of innocents. It strikes in cowardly ways.

They have also challenged us as to whether we can continue during this period in fighting this enemy to abide by the bedrock of our justice system, the Constitution.

Before us on the floor of the Senate is a bill to address how our country will interpret the Geneva Conventions, and we will try to comprehend and detain in this nontraditional, asymmetric war.

I truly believe that how we answer these challenges will not only test our commitment to our Constitution, but it will also test our very foundation of justice. It sends a message, also, to other countries—a message that will ultimately dictate how our soldiers and personnel are treated should they be captured by others.

Earlier this month, a bipartisan group of Senators worked together to develop a solution to these complex issues, and the Armed Services Committee reported a compromise military commissions bill to the Senate by a vote of 15 to 9.

Unfortunately, that is not the bill that is before this body today. Instead, House and Senate Republicans met with the White House and made changes that significantly altered the intent of this legislation and changed the bill in such a manner that I cannot at present support its passage without substantial amendment.

I do not believe the bill before us is constitutional. It is being rushed through a month before a major election in which the leadership of this body is challenged.

The first of my concerns is the issue of habeas corpus. I very much support the amendment offered by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. The bill before us eliminates a basic right of the American justice system, and that is the right of habeas corpus review. It is constitutionally provided to ensure that innocent people are not held captive or held indefinitely. Habeas corpus has been a cornerstone of our legal system. It goes back, as it has been said, to the days of the Magna Carta. Our Founding Fathers enshrined this right in the Constitution because they understood mistakes happen and there is need for someone to appeal a mistake or a wrong conviction.

Just a few weeks ago, a man named Abu Bakker-Qassim, who was held at Guantanamo, described how he was held for years, even though he had never been a terrorist or a soldier. He was never even on a battlefield. He had been sold by Pakistani bounty hunters to the United States military for $5,000. Qassim said it was only because of the availability of habeas corpus that this mistake was able to be corrected. That is why Senator SPECTER’s amendment is right.

If innocent people are at Guantanamo—and they presumably are and have abuses according to the Abu Ghraib pictures and the wind—then there is a place and it must be an avenue to address these problems. Eliminating habeas corpus rights is a serious mistake and it will open the door to other efforts to remove habeas corpus.

Next, I am very concerned about the ability to use coerced testimony. This will be the first time in modern history that United States military tribunals will be free to admit evidence that was obtained through abusive tactics so long as the judge determines it is reliable and relevant or so long as it was obtained before December 30, 2005.

We have heard from countless witnesses that coerced testimony is inherently unreliable. We don't want to send the message that coercion is an acceptable tactic to use on Americans as well.

The fact is we had testimony in the Judiciary Committee from the head of all of the Judge Advocate Corps who said they did not believe torture worked. I am very concerned about the definition of torture and the lack of clarity on cruel and inhumane treatment—especially combined with giving the President discretion to decide what he believes interrogation methods are permissible.

We have already seen through press reports that this administration pushes the boundaries on allowable interrogation techniques and these abuses cannot continue.

Finally, I am concerned about the rules for what evidence may be used to convict someone and then their limited ability to have a court review their case.

If one is not allowed to know what the basis of conviction was and then is only given limited judicial review of their conviction, how can we be confident that we are not holding innocent people who were caught in the wrong place at the wrong time—such an outcome severely harms our standing in the global community.

I believe these issues are too important for us to rush through a bill of this magnitude.

These are difficult times and difficult issues. However, I do not believe the expediency of the moment or the political winds of an impending election should allow us to abandon our core values as a Nation.

The Founding Fathers created specific constitutional limitations. And since that time the United States has been at the forefront of demanding humane treatment of all people. We must not turn our back on these fundamental principles.

I am disappointed to be voting against this bill. I had hoped a real bipartisan compromise could be reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. Who yields time?

Mr. SPECTER, Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The distinguished Senator is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SMITH, Mr. President, this is a most difficult issue we are engaged in. We are arguing about what I believe is a cornerstone principle of the rule of law, and that is the issue of habeas corpus.

I know this is an unusual war, and I don't know its duration. No one fully does. But I am concerned that if what is to be true of our Constitution and to the rule of law, we have to be true to that law.

I have traveled as a Senator all over this globe and have spoken with great pride about the superiority of democracy to other means of government. While I support this bill in providing due process for these detainees, I rise because I am concerned about the provisions relating to habeas corpus.

I am reminded of the words of Thomas Jefferson who once said:

'The habeas corpus secures every man here, alien or citizen, against everything which is not law, whatever shape it may assume.'

On another occasion he said:

'I would rather be exposed to the inconveniences attending too much liberty than to those attending too small a degree of it.'

What we are talking about is section 7 of this bill, which will further strip the Federal courts of jurisdiction to hear pending Gitmo cases as it applies to all pending and future cases. Had this proposal been law earlier this year, the Supreme Court may not have had jurisdiction to hear the Hamdan case, which is what brings us here today.

At the heart of the habeas issue is whether the President should have the sole authority to indefinitely detain unlawful enemy combatants without any judicial restraints. Congress will provide the President with this unilateral authority by enacting legal restrictions aimed at stripping courts of jurisdiction to hear habeas claims. In doing so, the President does not have to show any cause for detaining an individual labeled an "unlawful enemy combatant."

Stripped of jurisdiction by recent legislation, U.S. courts will not have the ability to hear an individual's request to learn why he is even being detained. Providing detainees with the right to ask a court to evaluate the legality of their detention I believe would not cost U.S. lives. However, it will test American laws.

Claims have been made that providing detainees the right to hear why they are being detained necessitates providing them with classified information. I do not believe this to be true. Similar to the military commission legislation, it would only allow a judge to determine clearance to see the evidence against the defendant to evaluate its reliability and probative value.

Permanent detention of foreigners without reason damages our moral integrity regarding international rules of law. To quote: "History shows that in the wrong hands, the power to jail people without showing cause is a tool of despotism." A responsibility this Nation has always assumed is to ensure that no one is held prisoner unjustly.

Stripping courts of their authority to hear habeas claims is a frontal attack on our judiciary and its institutions, as well as our civil rights laws. Habeas corpus is a cornerstone constitutional order, and a suspension of that right, whether for U.S. citizens or foreigners under U.S. control, ought to trouble us all. It certainly gives me pause.

Partisan compromise could be reached. I am disappointed to be voting against this bill. I had hoped a real bipartisan compromise could be reached.

The right to judicial appeal is enshrined in our Constitution. It is part and parcel of the rule of law. The Supreme Court has described the writ of habeas corpus as "the fundamental instrument for safeguarding individual freedom against arbitrary and lawless State action."

Some of the darkest hours in our Nation’s history have resulted from the suspension of habeas corpus, notably the internment of Japanese Americans during World War II.

Obviously, I am not here to question the wisdom of Abraham Lincoln. We have had no wiser President. But one of the most controversial decisions of his administration was the suspension of habeas corpus for all military-related cases, ignoring the ruling of a U.S. circuit court against this order. He, in fact, believe, if my memory of history serves me, imprisoned the entire Maryland Legislature because of their attempts to secede from the Union. He did it. It happened. It is not necessarily the proudest moment of his administration. But it is something that has been raging with controversy ever since.

Habeas petitions are not clogging the courts and are not frivolous. The administration claims that the approximately 200 pending habeas claims are clogging our courts and are for the most part frivolous. These petitions are not an undue administrative burden. Judges always have the discretion to dismiss frivolous claims, and indefinite detention of a foreigner without showing cause, Mr. President, is not frivolous.

I suppose what brings me to the floor today is my memory of my study of the law. While I was in law school, I was particularly taken with the study of the Nuremberg trials. The words of...
Justice Robert H. Jackson inspired me then and inspire me still. He was our chief counsel for the allied powers. What he said on that occasion in his closing address to the international military tribunal is an inspiration. Said he:

That four great nations, flushed with victory and stung with injury stay the hand of vengeance and voluntarily submit their captives to the judgment of the law is one of the most significant tributes that Power has ever paid to Reason.

On the fairness of the Nuremberg proceedings, he said in his closing statement:

Of one thing we may be sure. The future will never have to ask with misgiving, what could the Nazis have said in their favor. History will know what whatever could be said, they were allowed to say. They have been given the evidences of their own acts, in the days of their pomp and power, never given to any man. But fairness is not weakness. The extraordinary fairness of these hearings is an attribute to our strength.

I simply feel this particular provision in this bill ought to be taken out. We ought not to suspend the writ of habeas corpus. We should go the extra mile, not as a sign of weakness, but as evidence of our strength.

I intend to vote for the underlying bill and ultimately will leave the judgment of its constitutionality without habeas to the judgment of the judiciary, but I believe we are called upon to go the extra mile to show our strength and not our weakness, and ultimately our Nation will be stronger if we stand by the rule of law.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Oregon for those very cogent remarks, especially in the context of additional Republican support, stated bluntly, and in light of more moderate Republican support.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the Democratic leader has yielded 2 minutes of his leadership time to me. I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to proceed on that basis.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I support the Senator-Leahy amendment on the writ of habeas corpus. The habeas corpus language in this bill is as legally abusive of the rights guaranteed in the U.S. Constitution as the actions at Abu Ghraib, Guantánamo, and the CIA’s secret prisons were physically abusive of the detainees themselves.

The Supreme Court has long held that all persons inside the United States, including lawful permanent residents and other aliens, have a constitutional right to the writ of habeas corpus. Yet, this provision purports to apply even to aliens who are detained inside the United States, including lawful permanent residents.

Unlike the provision that was included in the Detainee Treatment Act last year, this court-stripping provision would apply on a world-wide basis, not just at Guantánamo. It would apply to detainees of all Federal agencies, not just DOD. Detainees outside of Guantánamo do not have access to habeas corpus rights for detainees. It also prohibits the U.S. courts from hearing or considering “any other action against the United States or its agents relating to any aspect of the detention, treatment, or trial” of an alien detainee. As a result, this provision would leave many detainees without any alternative legal remedy at all, even after released, even if there is every reason to believe that the detention was in error, and even if the detainees were tortured or abused while in U.S. custody.

For example, the Canadian Government recently concluded, after a comprehensive review, that one of its citizens had been handed over by U.S. authorities to a foreign country which subjected him to torture and cruel and inhuman treatment, without any evidence that he was an enemy combatant or that he supported any terrorist group. Under this habeas corpus court-stripping provision, this individual would have no legal remedy in the U.S. courts even after he was finally released from illegal detention, unless the United States acknowledges that it made a mistake when it determined that he was an enemy combatant.

The fundamental premise of last year’s Detainee Treatment Act, DTA, was that we could restrict future habeas corpus suits, because we were providing an alternative course of access to the courts.

The language in the bill before us would deprive many detainees of the right to file a writ of habeas corpus without providing any alternative form of relief. For example, this provision applies on a worldwide basis, not just at Guantánamo. DOD detainees outside Guantánamo do not have access to Combatant Status Review Tribunals—CSRTs—so they can’t get to court to review CSRTs. Because this bill would deprive them of the writ of habeas corpus or any other legal remedy, they would have no access to the courts at all.

The provision applies to detainees of all Federal agencies, not just DOD. Detainees of other Federal agencies do not get CSRTs, so they can’t get to court to review CSRTs. Because this bill would deprive them of the writ of habeas corpus or any other legal remedy, they would have no access to the courts at all.

The provision even applies to lawful resident aliens who are detained and held inside the United States. Because this bill would deprive them of the writ of habeas corpus or any other legal remedy, they would have no access to the courts at all.

Even in cases where DOD regulations provide detainees a right to Combatant Status Review Tribunals—CSRTs—such tribunals may not be an adequate substitute for judicial review under a writ of habeas corpus. CSRTs are perfunctory proceedings that do not permit review of hearsay evidence, and evidence that is never disclosed to the accused. Detainees before those status review tribunals are denied access to witnesses and documents needed to rebut allegations against them by the government. Reviewing CSRT determinations are not authorized to make an independent determination whether there is a lawful basis for the detention.

The court stripping provision in the bill does more than just eliminate habeas corpus rights for detainees. It also prohibits the U.S. courts from hearing or considering “any other action against the United States or its agents relating to any aspect of the detention, treatment, or trial” of an alien detainee.

A separate provision in the bill adds that no person—who properly held as an alien detainee or not—may in any court of any country other than the United States. Other provisions establish new defenses for individuals who may be accused of violating standards for the treatment of detainees under U.S. law.

Taken together, these provisions do not just deprive detainees of the ability to challenge the basis on which they have been detained—they are an effort to insulate the United States from any judicial review of our treatment of detainees, an effort to ensure that there will be no accountability for actions that violate the laws and the standards of the United States.

Last year, this Congress took an important stand for the rule of law by enacting the Detainee Treatment Act, which prohibits the cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment of detainees in the custody of any U.S. agency anywhere in the world. That landmark law is at risk from the provisions of this bill that are a source of rights in any court of the United States. Other provisions establish new defenses for individuals who may be accused of violating standards for the treatment of detainees under U.S. law.

Earlier this month, we received a letter from three retired Judge Advocates General, who urged us not to strip the courts of habeas corpus jurisdiction. That letter, signed by Admiral Hutson, Admiral Guter, and General Brahmals, stated:

We urge you to oppose any further erosion of the proper authority of our courts and to reject any provision that would strip the courts of habeas corpus jurisdiction.

As Alexander Hamilton and James Madison emphasized in the Federalist Papers, the writ of habeas corpus embodies principles fundamental to our nation. It is the essence of the rule of law, ensuring that neither king nor executive may deprive any person of liberty without some independent review to ensure that the detention has a reasonable basis in law and fact. That right must be preserved. For the United States, for our security. They are what our country stands for.

We have received similar letters from nine distinguished retired Federal
Some persons detained at Guantanamo may be terrorists guilty of plotting against the people and the Government of these United States. Of course terrorists must be properly detained and prosecuted for their evil deeds. But Pentagon lawyers may think some may be improperly detained. Some may be persons simply swept up because they were in the wrong place at the wrong time. How can we know which truly deserve to be held and tried as enemy combatants if we abolish the legal right of the incarcerated to fairly challenge their detention in court?

The provision in the bill before us deprives Federal courts of jurisdiction over matters of law that are clearly entrusted to them by the Constitution of the United States. The Constitution is clear on this point: The only two instances in which habeas corpus may be suspended are in the case of a rebellion or an invasion. We are not in the midst of a rebellion, and there is no invasion. It is unbelievable that those who drafted the Constitution deliberately used the word "suspended." They did not say that habeas corpus could be forever denied, abolished, revoked, or eliminated. They said that, in only two instances, it could be suspended temporarily. Not forever. Not like in this bill.

How can we, the U.S. Senate, in this bill abdicate habeas corpus by approving a provision that so clearly contravenes the text of the Constitution? Where is our respect for the checks and balances system that the founders created to prevent executive overreach? It is notable that those who drafted the Constitution deliberately used the word "suspended." They did not say that habeas corpus could be forever denied, abolished, revoked, or eliminated. They said that, in only two instances, it could be suspended temporarily. Not forever. Not like in this bill.

Mr. President, I ask my colleagues to join me in support of the amendment that has been offered to preserve the writ of habeas corpus.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I have received a letter from over 100 law professors and other distinguished citizens expressing their opposition to the habeas corpus provisions in the military tribunal bill. They urge support for the Specter-Leahy amendment to remedy that flaw. I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. BILL FRIST, Majority Leader, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.
Hon. DENNIS HASTERT, Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

Hon. HARRY REID, Democratic Leader, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.
Hon. NANCY PELOSI, Democratic Leader, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR FRIST, SENATOR REID, SENATOR HASTERT AND REPRESENTATIVE PELOSI: We agree with the views set forth in the undated letter sent this month to Members of Congress from Judge John J. Gibbons, Judge Shirley A. Abrahamson, Judge Judith R.4. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator WARNER has 4 minutes in opposition to the Specter amendment. Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I yield that to the Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, this has been a very spirited debate and I am going to give you a spirited answer to what I am proposing with my vote.

No. 1, my moral compass is very much intact, and when people mention moral compasses and the conscience of the Senate, I am going to sleep very good if I am doing something that is moral, is humane, what is not; what is right, what is wrong. I have tried to balance the interests of our troops and the interests of our judicial system and the rule of law in this great nation, and I think it is important that we do so.
of our country when it comes to dealing with people who find themselves in our capture.

Why not habeas for noncitizen, enemy combatant terrorists housed at Gitmo? No. 1, the whole Congress has agreed that habeas is not available; the Detainee Treatment Act will be available. The only reason we are here is because of the Hamdan decision. The Hamdan decision did not apply to the Detainee Treatment Act retroactively, so we have about 200 and some other prisoners left unattended and we are going to attend to them now.

Why do we—I and others—want to take habeas off the table and replace it with something else? I don’t believe judges should be making military decisions in a time of war. There is a reason the Germans and the Japanese and every other prisoner held by America have never gone to Federal court and asked the judge to determine their status. That is not a role the judiciary should be playing. They are not trained to make those decisions.

Under the Geneva Conventions article 5, the combatant tribunal requirement is a military decision. So I believe very vehemently that the military is better qualified to determine who an enemy combatant is over a Federal judge. That is the way it has been, is the way it should be, and with my vote, that is the way it is going to be.

What is the problem? Why am I worried about having Federal judges turning every enemy combatant decision into a trial? In 1950 the Supreme Court, denying habeas rights to German and Japanese prisoners, said:

Such trials would hamper the war effort and bring aid and comfort to the enemy. I agree with that.

They would diminish the prestige of our commanders not only with enemies, but with neutrals as well.

I agree with that.

It would be difficult to devise a more effective field commander than to allow the very enemies he has ordered to refuse to submit to submission to call him to account in his own civil courts and divert his efforts and attention from the military offensive abroad to the legal defensive at home.

I agree with that. That is why we shouldn’t be doing habeas cases in a time of war. Nor is it likely that the result of such enemy litigiousness would be conflict between judicial and military opinion—highly comforting to the enemies of the United States.

These trials impede the war effort. It allows a judge to take what has historically been a military function.

What is the purpose of this body and our country is to allow the military to do what they are best at doing: controlling the battlefield. Let them define who an enemy combatant is under the Geneva Conventions requirements. Indefinite detention is a stealthy way of changing the Geneva Conventions, which is Geneva Conventions compliant, in my opinion, and let the Federal courts come in after they made their decision to see if the military applied the correct law, the procedures were followed, and the evidence justifies the decision of the military.

To substitute a judge for the military in a time of war to determine something so critical as who our enemy is is not only not necessary under our Constitution, it impedes the war effort, it is irresponsible, it needs to stop, and it should never have happened. I am confident Congress has the ability, if we choose to make the Right of an enemy combatant, noncitizen—what rights they have in a time of war and what has happened.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator’s time has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I will ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, if I may, examples of the habeas petitions filed on behalf of detainees against our troops.

There being no further objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXAMPLES OF HABEAS PetITIONS FILED OF BEHALF OF Detainees

1. Canadian detainee who threw a grenade that killed an American and who comes from family with longstanding al Qaeda ties moves for preliminary injunction against interrogating him or engaging in ‘cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment’ of him (n.b. this motion was denied by Judge Bates).

2. "Al Odah motion for dictionary internet search term''—Kuwaiti detainees seek court orders that they be provided dictionaries in contravention of GTMO’s force protection policy on censored internet access and be allowed to have high-speed internet access at their lodging on the base and be allowed to use classified DoD telecommunications facilities, all on the theory that otherwise their ‘right to counsel’ is unduly burdened.

3. "Alladeen—Motion for TRO re transfer''—Egyptian detainee who Combatant Status Review Tribunal adjudicated as no longer an enemy combatant and who was therefore due to be released by the United States, files motion to block his repatriation to Egypt.

4. "Paracha—Motion for TRO re Conditions''—Motion by high level al Qaeda detainee complaining about base security procedures, speed of mail delivery, and medical treatment; seeks that he be transferred to the ‘least onerous conditions’ at GTMO and asking the court to order GTMO allow him to keep any books and reading materials sent to him and to ‘report to the Court’ on ‘his opportunities for exercise, communication, recreation, worship, etc.’

5. "Motion for PI re Medical Records''—Motion by detainee accusing military’s health professionals of ‘gross and intentional medical malpractice’ in alleged violation of the 4th, 5th, 8th, and 14th Amendments, 42 USC 1981, and unspecified international agreements.

6. "Abdah—Emergency Motion re DVDS''—‘emergency’ motion seeking court order requiring GTMO to set aside its normal security procedures and show detaineesDVDS that are purportedly banned military videos.

7. "Petitioners’ Supp. Opposition’’—Filing by detainee requesting that, as a condition of the stay of proceedings appeal, the Court involve itself in his medical situation and set the stage for them to second-guess the provision of medical care and other conditions.

8. "Al Odah Supplement to PI Motion”—Motion by Kuwaiti detainees unsatisfied with the Koran they are provided as standard issue by GTMO, seeking seeking court order that they be allowed to keep various other supplementary religious materials, such as a hadith or 4-volume Koran with commentary, in their cells.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is 12 minutes remaining.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I think it would be appropriate, if I may have Senator WARNER’s concurrence, to tell our colleagues that this will be the end of the time allocated for this amendment and we could expect to vote at about 11:45 or 11:50.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, very definitely. As soon as all time on this amendment is allocated or yielded back, my intention is to move to a vote.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank my distinguished colleague.

Mr. President, I fully realize it is unpopular to speak for aliens, unpopular to speak on what might be interpreted to be in favor of enemy combatants, but that is not what this Senator is doing. What I am trying to establish is that there should be no habeas cases in a time of war to determine whether they are enemy combatants.

I submit that the materials produced on this floor and in the hearings of the Judiciary Committee show conclusively that the Combatant Status Review Tribunals do not have an adequate way of determining whether these individuals are enemy combatants. What we are doing is defending the jurisdiction of the Federal courts to maintain the rule of law. If the Federal courts are not open, if the Federal courts do not have jurisdiction to determine constitutionality, then how are we to determine what is constitutional?

My own background is one of a reverence for the law, a reverence for the independence of the judiciary, and a reverence for the rule of law as interpreted by our Constitution. If it hadn’t been for the Federal courts, the Supreme Court of the United States, we would not have seen the decision in Brown v. Board of Education in 1954. The legislative branches were too mired in politics, the executive was too mired in politics, and it was only the Supreme Court which could recognize the practice of segregation and it led to that decision.

Similarly, it was the Federal courts which changed the criminal procedure in this country as a matter of basic fairness. Prior to the decision of the case of Brown v. Mississippi in 1963, the Federal courts did not establish standards for State criminal courts. It was determined as a matter of States rights that States could establish their own determinations. But in that case, the evidence was overwhelming about a practice of discrimination. For the first time, the Supreme Court of the United States stepped in and said: States may not take an individual, take him across State lines, have a feigned hanging, extract a confession, and use that to convict him. That was done by the Federal courts.

I had the occasion when I was in the Philadelphia district attorney’s office to watch a trial on a daily basis in a revolution in constitutional criminal procedure. I was litigating the issues in the criminal courts when Mapp v. Ohio came down, imposing the rule of exclusion of evidence in State courts if obtained in violation of the fourth amendment. And when Escobedo came down, limiting admissions and confessions if not in conformity with rules. Then Miranda v. Ohio came down. I found those decisions as a prosecutor very limiting and impeding. But the course of time has demonstrated that those decisions have improved the quality of justice in America. Chief Justice Rehnquist, a recognized conservative, sought to eliminate or limit Miranda when he came to the Supreme Court of the United States. Later in his career, he said in Miranda that the protections of those warnings were appropriate and were helpful in our society.

There are four fundamental, undeniable principles and facts involved in the law we are debating today. The first undeniable principle is that a statute cannot overrule a Supreme Court decision on constitutional grounds, and a statute cannot contradict an explicit constitutional provision.

Point No. 2, the Constitution is explicit in the statement that habeas corpus may be suspended only with rebellion or invasion.

Fact No. 3, uncontested. We do not have a rebellion or an invasion.

Fact and principle No. 4, the Supreme Court says that aliens are covered by habeas corpus.

We have already had considerable exposition of the opinion by Justice O’Connor that the constitutional right of habeas corpus applies to individuals, which means citizens and aliens. The case of Rasul v. Bush, which explicitly involved an alien, says this in the opinion of Justice Stevens speaking for the Court:

Habeas corpus received explicit recognition in the Constitution, which forbids the suspension of—

Then Justice Stevens cites the constitutional provision.

The legality of the writ of habeas corpus cannot be suspended unless in the cases of rebellion or invasion, and neither is present here. So you have the express holding of the Supreme Court in Rasul v. Bush that habeas corpus applies to aliens.

Justice Stevens went on to say that:

Executive imprisonment has been considered oppressive and lawless since John, at Runnymede.

What this bill would do in striking habeas corpus and take a daily based society back some 900 years to King John at Runnymede which led to the adoption of the Magna Charta in 1215, which is the antecedent for habeas corpus and was the basis for including in the Constitution of the United States the principle that habeas corpus may not be suspended.

I believe it is unthinkable, out of the question, to enact Federal legislation today which denies habeas corpus right which would take us back some 900 years and deny the fundamental principle of the Magna Charta imposed on King John at Runnymede.

Mr. President, how much time do I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is 3½ minutes remaining.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, the argument has been made that there is an alternative procedure which has constitutional muster. But the provisions of the statute which set up the Combatant Status Review Tribunal are conclusively insufficient on their face. The statute provides that the Combatant Status Review Tribunal may be reviewed by the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia only to the extent that the ruling was consistent with the standards and procedures specified by the Secretary of Defense. Now, to comply with the standards of procedures determined by the Secretary of Defense does not mean exclude on its face a factual determination as to what happens to the detainees.

When the Senator from South Carolina argues that judges should not make military decisions, I agree with him totally. But the converse of that is that judges should make judicial decisions, the deciding is decided. The converse, that judges should not make military decisions, is the principle that the Secretary of Defense ought not to decide what the constitutional standards are. The Secretary of Defense should not decide what the constitutional standards are. That is up to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that aliens are excluded from the explicit constitutional protection of habeas corpus. The argument is made that the Swain case allows for alternative procedures. The Swain case involved a District of Columbia habeas corpus proceeding which was virtually identical with habeas corpus provided under Federal statute 2241, so of course it was satisfactory.

A number of straw men have been set up. One, that we could not apply these principles to the 18,000 detainees in Iraq—nobody seeks to do that; the straw man that we should not give search and seizure protections of the fourth amendment—no one seeks to do that; or the fifth amendment protections or the privilege of self-incrimination.

In essence and in conclusion, what this entire controversy boils down to is whether Congress is going to legislate to deny a constitutional right which is explicit in the document of the Constitution itself and which has been applied to aliens by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee has said that he does not want to have this matter come back to Congress. But surely as we are standing here, if this bill is passed and habeas corpus is stricken, we will be on this floor again rewriting this law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. All time has expired.

Is there further debate on the amendment?

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, may I inquire, the distinguished Senator from Michigan seeks a little additional time on leader time, is that correct?

Mr. LEVIN. I have already accomplished that. I thank my friend.

Mr. WARNER. At this time I would like to yield to the Senator from South Carolina 3 minutes off of the time under my control on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM, What are we trying to stress to the body is that this is a war we are fighting, not crime, and habeas corpus rights have not been given to any other prisoners under U.S. control in the past, for very good reason. It promotes the war effort.

Let me give you a flavor of what is coming out of Guantanamo Bay. This is what is happening to the troops defending America by the people who are incarcerated, determined by our military to be an enemy combatant. A Canadian detainee, who threw a grenade that killed an Army medic in a firefight and who comes from a family with longstanding al-Qaida ties, moved for a preliminary injunction forbidding interrogation of him or engaging in cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment. In other words, he was going to ask the judge to take over running the jail and his interrogation.

A Kuwaiti detainee sought a court order that would provide dictionaries in contravention of Gitmo force protection policy and that their counsel have high-speed Internet access.

Another one applied for a motion that would allow them to change the base security procedures to allow speedy mail delivery medical treatment. He sought an order transferring him to the least onerous condition at Gitmo. He asked the court to allow him to keep any books and reading materials sent to him and report to the court on his opportunities for exercise, communication, recreation and worship.

We are not going to turn this war over to a series of court cases, where our troops are having to account for a bunch of junk by people trying to kill Americans. They will have their day in court, but they are not going to turn this whole war into a mockery with my vote.

I yield back.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I believe there is no time remaining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no time remaining.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Five minutes of the time of the Senator from West Virginia has been previously allocated to the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. KERRY.

Mr. KERRY. If I could correct that, my time is considerably from come from the Senator from West Virginia. I believe I have time already allocated, so it would be separate.

Mr. ROGERS. If the situation is it is deducted from this Senator’s time, I would appreciate that, separately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the understanding of the Chair that the Senator from Massachusetts, the unanimous consent was obtained at 10 o’clock with 5 minutes coming from the time of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, that unanimous consent request was apparently agreed to and is in place right now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

The Senator from West Virginia.

AMENDMENT NO. 5095

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of myself, and Senators CLINTON, WYDEN, MIKULSKI and FEINGOLD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The Senator from West Virginia, [Sen. John D. Rockefeller IV, D-W. Va., moves to recommit this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary at the conclusion of the current session with instructions to report a bill as amended]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, the essential matters of the bill have been notified there are still three amendments remaining, one by Senator ROCKEFELLER, one by Senator KENNEDY, one from Senator BYRD. If I understand from my distinguished ranking member, we will proceed to the amendment of Senator ROCKEFELLER.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I have yielded 5 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts, if that is okay, on a separate matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, the ranking member is about to advise the Senator with regard to which amendment might be forthcoming.

Mr. LEVIN. If Senator ROCKEFELLER is ready, I understand there is a time agreement of 1 hour equally divided.
(iii) the information provided to United States intelligence agencies by foreign governments relating to the interrogation of the detainee;
(iv) the current status of the detainee;
(v) the status of any parliamentary, judicial, or other investigation about the rendition or other transfer; and
(vi) any information about potential risks to United States interests resulting from the rendition or other transfer.

(c) CIA INSPECTOR GENERAL AND GENERAL COUNSEL REPORTS.—

(1) ANNUAL REPORTS REQUIRED.—Not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, and annually thereafter, the Inspector General of the Central Intelligence Agency and the General Counsel of the Central Intelligence Agency shall each submit to the congressional intelligence committees a report on the detention, interrogation and rendition programs of the Central Intelligence Agency during the preceding year.

(2) ELEMENTS.—Each report under paragraph (1) shall include, for the period covered by such report, the following:

(A) An assessment of the adherence of the Central Intelligence Agency to any applicable law in the conduct of the detention, interrogation, and rendition programs of the Central Intelligence Agency.

(B) Any violations of law or other abuse on the part of personnel of the Central Intelligence Agency, other United States Government personnel or contractors, or anyone else associated with the detention, interrogation, and rendition programs of the Central Intelligence Agency in the conduct of such programs.

(C) An assessment of the effectiveness of the detention, interrogation, and rendition programs of the Central Intelligence Agency.

(D) Any recommendations to ensure that the detention, interrogation, and rendition programs of the Central Intelligence Agency are conducted in a lawful and effective manner.

(3) CONSTRUCTION OF REPORTING REQUIREMENT.—Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to modify the authority and reporting obligations of the Inspector General of the Central Intelligence Agency under section 17 of the Central Intelligence Agency Act of 1949 (50 U.S.C. 403a) or any other law.

(d) CERTIFICATION OF COMPLIANCE.—Not later than 15 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, and promptly upon any subsequent approval of interrogation techniques for use by the Central Intelligence Agency, the Attorney General shall submit to the congressional intelligence committees—

(1) an unclassified certification whether or not each approved interrogation technique complies with the Constitution of the United States and all applicable treaties, statutes, Executive orders, and regulations; and

(2) a list of why each approved technique complies with the Constitution of the United States and all applicable treaties, statutes, Executive orders, and regulations.

(e) AVAILABILITY OF REPORTS.—Each report under this subsection shall be fully accessible by each member of the congressional intelligence committees.

(f) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(A) The term "congressional intelligence committees" means—

(i) the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate; and

(ii) the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives.

(B) The term "law" includes the Constitution of the United States and any applicable treaty, statute, Executive order, or regulation.

Mr. ROCKERFELLER. Mr. President, for 4 years the Central Intelligence Agency’s program was kept from the full membership of the Senate and House Intelligence Committees.

For 4 years the CIA imprisoned and interrogated suspected terrorists at secret sites around the world that prevented Congress from not only knowing about the program but from acting on it and regulating it.

For 4 years, the White House refused to brief Intelligence Committee members about the program’s legal business and operations, as is required by law.

For 4 years, the members of the Senate and the House Intelligence Committees, whose duty it is to authorize the 14,000 interrogations each CIA program, were kept in the dark by an administration which ignored the legal requirement to keep the Congress fully and currently informed on all intelligence activities.

The amendment offered reverses the executive branch’s 4-year policy of indifference toward Congress.

My amendment corrects a serious omission in the pending bill: the need for Congress to reassert its fundamental right to understand the intelligence activities it authorizes and funds.

My amendment would subject the CIA’s detention and interrogation to meaningful congressional oversight for the first time in 4 years.

A series of reviews and reports that will enable Congress to evaluate the program’s scope and legality, as well as its effectiveness.

The amendment establishes this absence of congressional oversight in four ways. First, my amendment requires the Director of the CIA to provide a quarterly report to all members of the Intelligence Committees in both the House and the Senate detailing the detention facilities, how they are operated, and how they are used by the CIA.

It requires that the detainees held at these facilities be listed by name as well as the basis for their detention and the description of interrogation techniques used on them and the accompanying legal rationale.

This quarterly report also requires the recording of any violation or abuse under the CIA program as well as an assessment of the effectiveness of the detention and interrogation program.

This issue of the effectiveness of interrogation techniques is incredibly important and often overlooked as an aspect of the debate over the CIA program. Interrogations that coerce information can produce bad intelligence—not necessarily, but they can produce misleading intelligence—fabricated intelligence to get out of the treatment, information that can harm, not help, our efforts to locate and capture terrorists.

Second, my amendment would require the Director of the CIA to provide a quarterly report to all members of the Intelligence Committees on the disposition of each detainee transferred out of the CIA prisons, whether the detainee was transferred to the Department of Defense for prosecution before a military commissioner for further detention, whether the detainee was transferred to the custody of the Attorney General to stand trial in a civilian court, or whether the detainee was rendered or otherwise transferred to the custody of another nation.

Third, it needs to be a comprehensive and accurate accounting of detainees held by the CIA. Congress has a responsibility to know who is held by the CIA, why they are held and for how long they are held.

The CIA detention and interrogation program cannot function as a black hole into which people disappear for years on end.

We have been told by CIA leaders that the agency does not want to be—does not want to be—transparent. They do not want to be the prison wardens for the United States Government.

The goal of the CIA program should be to obtain, through lawful means, intelligence information that can identify and locate potential terrorist suspects and prevent further terrorist attacks and then to bring to justice those who we believe to be criminals.

This is the so-called endgame that everyone talks about.

If the CIA detention program is allowed to function as some sort of prisoner purgatory, we have then failed.

Our efforts to locate and capture terrorists, to obtain, through lawful means, intelligence information that can identify and locate potential terrorist suspects and prevent further terrorist attacks and then to bring to justice those who we believe to be criminals. This is so-called endgame that everyone talks about.

Second, my amendment would re-establish Senate and House Intelligence Committees in both the House and the Senate detailing the detention facilities, how they are operated, and how they are used by the CIA.

It requires that the detainees held at these facilities be listed by name as well as the basis for their detention and the description of interrogation techniques used on them and the accompanying legal rationale.

This quarterly report also requires the recording of any violation or abuse under the CIA program as well as an assessment of the effectiveness of the detention and interrogation program.

Interrogations that coerce information can produce bad intelligence—not necessarily, but they can produce misleading intelligence—fabricated intelligence to get out of the treatment, information that can harm, not help, our efforts to locate and capture terrorists.

This is so-called endgame that everyone talks about.

If the CIA detention program is allowed to function as some sort of prisoner purgatory, we have then failed.

Also of concern to me is the lack of existing oversight in how the United States transports or renders detainees to other countries for imprisonment and interrogation.

The limited information the administration has shared with the Senate Intelligence Committee on the CIA’s rendition program does not by any means assure, at least this Senator, that the intelligence community has a program in place, so to speak, to assert what happens to these individuals when they are transferred to foreign custody, such as how they are treated, how they are interrogated, whether they divulge intelligence information of value, and whether this information is then provided to the CIA.

The CIA’s rendition program deserves far greater scrutiny and congressional oversight than it has been given to date.

The third way in which this amendment establishes a meaningful oversight of the CIA detention and interrogation program is to require the CIA Inspector General and the CIA general counsel each separately review the program on an annual basis to report their findings to the Intelligence Committees. These independent Agency reviews would assess the CIA’s compliance with any applicable law or regulation and the conduct of detention, interrogation and rendition activities as well as to report to Congress any violations of law or other abuse on the part of personnel involved in the program.
The annual reviews of the Inspector General and the general counsel also would evaluate the effectiveness of the detention and interrogation program; effectiveness at obtaining valuable and reliable intelligence.

Finally, my amendment requires the Attorney General to submit to Congress an unclassified certification whether or not each interrogation technique approved for use by the CIA complies with the United States Constitution and all applicable treaties, statutes, and regulations. I believe this is a very important certification.

All Americans, not just the Congress, need an ironclad assurance from our Nation’s top enforcement officer that the CIA program and the interrogation techniques it employs are lawful in all respects. The CIA officers in the field, I might say, above all, need this assurance.

I do not believe there is anything particularly controversial about this amendment. I hope that Democrats and Republicans alike can embrace the need for restoring respect for the oversight role of the Intelligence Committees of the Congress over intelligence.

Only through reports that will be published with the amendment will the Congress have the information it lawfully deserves to understand the CIA’s detention and interrogation program and determine whether the program is producing the unique intelligence and information that justifies its continued operation.

Only when the President works with the Congress are we able to craft intelligence programs that are legally sound and operationally effective. Only when the President works with the Congress can America stand strong in its fight against terrorism.

Intelligence gathering through interrogation is one of the most important tools we have in the war on terrorism. My amendment will provide the congressional oversight necessary to assure that our intelligence officers in the field have clear guidelines for effective and legal interrogation.

Before yielding the floor, I will address two other matters very briefly.

Those who have taken the time to read through the bill we are debating will find the word “coercion” repeatedly in the text of the legislation. Coercion is a fitting word when considering the Senate’s final rush into voting on a bill with far-reaching legal and national security implications.

The final text of the underlying bill was negotiated by a handful of Republican Senators, many of whom I respect, and the White House. Democrats were not consulted. I was not consulted. This Senator was not consulted. Senator LEVIN was not consulted. We were kept out of these closed-door sessions.

I say that because the Senate Intelligence Committee is the only Senate committee responsible for authorizing CIA activities and the only committee briefed on classified details of the CIA’s detention and interrogation program. We were denied an opportunity to consider this bill, in fact, on sequential referral, which is our due.

In the mad dash to pass this bill before the Senate recesses, Senators are being given only five opportunities. I believe, to amend the bill, effectively preventing the Senate from trying to produce the best bill possible on the most important subject possible with respect to the gathering of intelligence. It does not have to be this way.

Finally, I am troubled by what I view as misleading statements about the current state of the CIA detention and interrogation program made by President Bush and senior administration officials. I say this for the record, and strongly.

The President and others have stated in recent weeks that the CIA program was halted as a result of the Supreme Court’s Hamdan decision on June 29, 2006. This assertion is false. Significant aspects of this program were halted following the passage of the Detainee Treatment Act in 2005, prohibiting cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment well before the Supreme Court decision.

The President has also been very forceful in his public statements asserting that the post-Hamdan application of Geneva Conventions Common Article 3 has created legal uncertainties about the CIA interrogation procedures that the Congress must resolve through legislation—only us—in order for the CIA program to continue. This assertion is misleading, and it is false as well.

Concerns over the legal exposure of CIA officers have existed since the program’s inception and did not begin with the Supreme Court’s Hamdan decision. These mischaracterizations illustrate to me why it is important for Congress to understand all facts about the CIA program.

Congress cannot and should not sit on the sidelines blithely ignorant about the details of a critical intelligence program that has been operating without meaningful congressional scrutiny for years.

I thank the Presiding Officer and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield for a unanimous consent request?

Mr. KERRY. Yes.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be added as a cosponsor to the Rockefeller amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, the last week before we leave for a long recess has always been extraordinarily busy—particularly when an election is only 42 days away. But, sadly, this has become too much the way the Senate does business and often its most important business.

Today, the leadership of the Senate has decided that legislation that will impact American authority in the world merits only a few hours of debate. What is at stake is the authority that is essential to winning and to waging a legitimate and effective war on terror, and also one that is critical to the safety of American troops, who may be located in remote areas.

If, in a few hours, we squander that moral authority, blur lines that for decades have been absolute, then no speech, no rhetoric, and no promise can restore it.

Four years ago, we were in a similar situation. An Iraq war resolution was rushed through the Senate because of election-year politics—a political calendar, not a statesman’s calendar. And 4 years later, the price we are paying is that many Americans say that an administration and an administration that we would trust.

Today, we face a different choice—to prevent an irreversible mistake, not to correct one. It is to stand and be counted, making sure that elections do not further compromise our moral authority and the safety of our troops.

Every Senator must ask him or herself: Does the bill before us treat America’s authority as a precious national asset that does not limit our power but magnifies our influence in the world? Does it make clear that the U.S. Government recognizes beyond any doubt that the protections of the Geneva Conventions have to be applied to prisoners in order to comply with the law, restore our moral authority, and protect American troops? Does it make clear that the United States of America does not engage in torture, period?

Despite protests to the contrary, I believe the answer is clearly no. I wish it were not so. I wish this compromise actually protected the integrity and letter and spirit of the Geneva Conventions. But it does not. In fact, I regret to say, despite the words and the protests to the contrary, this bill permits torture. This bill gives the President the discretion to interpret the meaning and application of the Geneva Conventions. It gives confusing definitions of “torture” and “cruel and inhuman treatment” that are inconsistent with the Detainee Treatment Act, which we passed 1 year ago, and inconsistent with the Army Field Manual. It provides exceptions for pain and suffering “incidental to lawful sanctions,” but it does not tell us what the lawful sanctions are.

So what are we voting for with this bill? We are voting to give the President the power to interpret the Geneva Conventions. We are voting to allow pain and suffering incident to some undefined lawful sanctions. We are voting to give an administration that lobbied for torture exactly what it wanted. And the administration has... been telling people it gives them what they wanted. The only guarantee we have that these provisions will prohibit torture is the word of the President. Well, I wish I could say the word of the President were enough on an issue as fundamental as torture. But we have been told this before.

The administration said there were weapons of mass destruction in Iraq, that Saddam Hussein had ties to al-Qaeda, that they would exhaust diplomacy before they went to war, that the insurgency was in its last throes. None of these statements were true.

The President said he agreed with Senator McCain's antitorture provisions in the Detainee Treatment Act. Yet he issued a signing statement reserving the right to ignore them. Are we supposed to trust that word?

He says flatly that "The United States does not torture," but then he tries to push the Congress into allowing him to do exactly that. And even here, he tries to substitute the interpretations of the Geneva Conventions to the Federal Register. Yet his Press Secretary announced that the administration may not need to comply with that requirement. And we are supposed to trust that?

Obviously, another significant problem with this bill is the unconstitutional limitation of the writ of habeas corpus. It is extraordinary to me that in 2 hours, and a few minutes of a vote, the Senate would pass away with something as specific as habeas corpus, of which the Constitution says: "[The] Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it.''

We have been told in press reports that it is a great compromise between the White House and my good friends, Senator McCain, and Senator Graham. We have been told that it protects the "integrity and letter and spirit of the Geneva Conventions.''

I wish what we are being told is true. It is not. Nothing in the language of the bill supports these claims. Let me be clear about something—something that it seems few people are willing to say. This bill permits torture. This bill gives the President the discretion to interpret and application of the Geneva Conventions. This bill gives an administration that lobbied for torture exactly what it wanted.

We are supposed to believe that there is an effective check on this expanse of Presidential power with the requirement that the President's interpretations be published in the Federal Register.

We shouldn't kid ourselves. Let's assume the President publishes his interpretation of this under the Geneva Convention. The interpretation, like the language in this bill, is vague and inconclusive. A concerned Senator or Congresswoman calls for oversight. Unless he or she is in the majority at the time, there won't be a hearing. Let's assume they are in the majority and get a hearing. Do we really think a bill will get through both houses of Congress? A bill that directly contradicts a Presidential interpretation of a matter of national security? My guess is that it won't happen, but maybe it will. Assume it does. The bill has no effect until the President actually signs it. So, unless the President chooses to reverse himself, all the power remains in the President's hands. And all the while, America's moral authority is at tatters, American troops are in greater jeopardy, and the war on terror is set back.

Could the President's grab be controlled by the courts? After all, it was the Supreme Court's decision in Hamdan that invalidated the President's last attempt to consolidate power and establish his own military tribune system. The problem now is that the bill strips the courts the power to hear such a case when it says "no person may invoke the Geneva Conventions...in any habeas or civil action.''

What are we left with? Unfettered Presidential power to interpret what—other than the statutorily proscribed "grave violations"—violates the Geneva Conventions. No wonder the President was so confident that his CIA program could continue as is. He gets to pass laws. And the administration have spent years now trying to blur.

Presidential discretion is not the only problem. The definition of what constitutes "grave breaches" of Article 3 is murky. Even those consistent with either the Detainee Treatment Act or the recently revised Army Field Manual. These documents prohibit "cruel, inhumane, or degrading treatment" as defined as "the cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment or punishment prohibited by the Fifth, Eighth, and Fourteenth Amendments.''

The definition is supported by an extensive body of case law evaluating what treatment is required by our constitutional standards of "dignity, civilization, humanity, decency, and fundamental fairness." And, I think quite tellingly, it is substantially similar to the definition that my good friend, Senator McCain, chose to include in his bill. And there is simply no reason why the standard adopted by the Army Field Manual and the Detainee Treatment Act, which this Congress has already approved, should not apply for all interrogations in all circumstances.

In the bill before us, however, there is no reference to any constitutional standards. The prohibition of degrading conduct has been dropped. And, there are caveats allowing pain and suffering "incidental to lawful sanctions." Nowhere does it tell us what "lawful sanctions" are. So, what are we voting for with this bill? We are voting to give the President the power to interpret the Geneva Conventions. We are voting to allow pain and suffering incidental to some undefined, lawful sanctions. The only guarantee we have that these provisions really will prohibit torture is the word of the President.

The word of the President. I wish I could say the words of the President were enough on an issue as fundamental as torture. Fifty years ago, President Kennedy sent his Secretary of State abroad on a crisis mission—to prove to our allies that Soviet missiles were being held in Cuba. The Secretary of State brought photos of the missiles. As he prepared to take them from his briefcase, our ally, a foreign head of state said, "put them away. The President of the United States is good enough for me." We each wish we lived in times like those—perilous times, but times when America’s moral authority, our credibility, were unquestioned, unchallenged.

The word of the President today is questioned. This administration said there were weapons of mass destruction in Iraq, that Saddam Hussein had ties to Al Qaeda, that they would exhaust diplomacy before we went to war, that the insurgency was in its last throes. None of these statements were true, and now we find our troops in the crossfire of civil war in Iraq with no end in sight. They keep saying the war in Iraq is making us safer, but our own intelligence agencies say it is actually fanning the flames of jihad, creating a whole new generation of terrorists and putting our country at greater risk of terrorist attack. It is no wonder then that we are hesitant to blindly accept the word of the President on this question today.

The President said he agreed with Senator McCain’s antitorture provisions in the Detainee Treatment Act. Yet, he issued a signing statement reinterpreting the word of the administration. No, the Senate cannot just accept the word of this administration that they will not engage in torture given the way in which everything they have already done and said on this most basic question has already put our troops at greater risk and undermined the very moral authority needed to win the war on terror. When the President says the United States doesn’t torture, there has to be no doubt about it. And when his words are unclear, Congress must step in to hold him accountable.

The administration will use fear to try and bludgeon anyone who disagrees with them.

Just as they pretended Iraq is the central front in the war on terror even as their intelligence agencies told them their policy made terrorism worse, they will pretend America needs its moral authority to win the war on terror.

The President’s experts have told him that not only does torture put our troops at risk and undermine our moral authority, but torture does not work. As LTG John Kimmons, the Army’s deputy chief of staff for intelligence, put it: “No good intelligence is going to come from abusive practices. I think history tells us that.” I think their empirical evidence of the last five years, hard years, tells us that. Any piece of intelligence which is obtained under duress, through the use of abusive techniques, would be unreliable. And additionally, it would do more harm than good when it inevitably became known that abusive practices were used. We can’t afford to get it wrong.

Neither justice nor good intelligence comes at the hands of torture. In fact, both depend on the rule of law. It would be wrong—tragically wrong—to authorize the President to require our sons and daughters to use torture for something that won’t even work.

Another significant problem with this bill is the unconstitutional elimination of the writ of habeas corpus. No less a conservative than Ken Starr got it right.

Congress should act cautiously to strike a balance between the need to detain enemy combatants during the present conflict and the need to honor the historic privilege of the writ of habeas corpus.

Ken Starr says, “Congress should act cautiously.” How cautiously are we acting when we eliminate any right to challenge an enemy combatant’s indefinite detention? When we eliminate habeas corpus for detainees both inside or outside the United States so long as the Government believes they are enemy combatants? When we not only do this for future cases but apply it to hundreds of cases currently making their way through our court system?

The Constitution is very specific when it comes to habeas corpus. It says, “[t]he privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it.” We are not in a case of rebellion, nor are we being invaded. Thus, we really don’t have the constitutional power to suspend the Great Writ. And, even if we did, the Constitution allows only for the writ to be suspended. It does not allow the writ to be permanently taken away. Yet, this is exactly what the bill does. It takes the writ away—forever—from anyone the administration determines is an “enemy combatant,” even if they are lawfully on U.S. soil and otherwise entitled to full constitutional protections, and even if they have absolutely no other recourse.

Think of what this means. This bill is giving the administration the power to pick up any non-U.S. citizen inside or outside of the United States, determine in their sole and unreviewable discretion that he is an unlawful combatant, and hold him in jail—be it Guantanamo Bay or a secret CIA prison—indefinately. That person would never get the chance to challenge his detention; to prove that he is not, in fact, an enemy combatant.

We are not talking about whether detainees can file a habeas suit because they don’t have access to the Internet or cable television. We are talking about something much more fundamental: whether people can be locked up forever without the chance to prove that the Government was wrong in detaining them. Allow this to become the policy of the United States and just imagine the difficulty our law enforcement and our Government will have arranging the release of an American citizen the next time our citizens are detained in other countries.

Mr. President, we all want to stop terrorist attacks. We all want to effectively use our military commissions bill is absolutely essential if we are going to continue to have good intelligence and move forward with the program of interrogating and containing detainees in an appropriate manner that will maintain our standing, our honor; and, put tight control on the United States than other countries do on their unlawful combatants. I respectfully suggest that the Rockefeller amendment is not only unnecessary, but the fact that the unintended effect is it would complicate the passage of this important military commissions bill. It would either delay or perhaps even derail this bill, which is absolutely essential if we are going to use our CIA agents back in the field doing appropriately limited interrogation techniques to find out what attacks are planned against the United States.

The President has pointed out, the interrogation is the thing that has uncovered plots that could have been very serious. We need to have our CIA professionals under carefully controlled circumstances doing the interrogation that gets the information.

As to the question about whether this is about oversight, well, our committee should be all about oversight. We need to be looking at these things. We need to be looking every day at what the agencies are doing. What the intelligence community is doing. But as I said here on the floor before, unfortunately, for the last 4 years, we have been looking in the rearview mirror. It has been our fault, not the fault of the agencies, that we have not done enough oversight because when we spent 2 years in the Phase I investigation, we found out the intelligence was flawed. The intelligence was inadequate because our intelligence assets were cut 20 percent in the 1980s. We had no human intel on the ground.

But, most of all, there was no pressure, no coercion by administration officials of the intelligence agencies, and there was no misrepresentation of the findings of the intelligence community—same intelligence that we in the Congress relied upon in supporting the decision to go to war against the hotbed of terrorism, Iraq.

Now, I do not take issue with that first phase. The Rockefeller Phase II has cost us another 2 years, and we have not learned anything more than we learned in the first phase and with the WMD and the 9/11 Commission.

If we would look back to looking out the front windshield, instead of looking in the rearview mirror, we should be doing precisely this kind of interrogation in the oversight committee. And I take no issue with many of the questions the Senator from West Virginia raises. As a matter of fact, I probably would have some of my own. But I do question the need for a very lengthy, detailed report every 3 months. If you read all of the requirements, this is a paperwork nightmare. They are going to have to comply with and tell us how they are going to comply, and we are going to oversee them.

I believe putting out this lengthy report gets us nowhere. Frankly, if our past experience is any guide, we will probably see those reports leaked to the press because reports have a way, regrettably, of being leaked and being disclosed.

I think there is one big problem with the Rockefeller amendment. In the amendment, it requires reports every 3 months the Attorney General—any time there are any new interrogation techniques, the Attorney General shall submit an unclassified certification whether or not each approved interrogation technique complies with the Constitution of the United States, applicable treaty statutes, Executive orders, relations, and an explanation of why it complies.

Mr. President, what we would just order in this amendment is to spend out for the world—and especially for al-Qaida and its related organizations—precisely what interrogation techniques are going to be used. Let me tell you something. I visited with intelligence agents around the world, some of whom have been in on the most sensitive interrogations we have had. I have asked them about that, and they have explained to me how they interrogate people. These interrogations I have even been to—I have even been to, though they were before the passage of this law—with the detainee treatment law. They do comply, and I think they are appropriate. The important thing, they say, is that what the terrorists are doing is not important. They don't know how they are going to be questioned or what is going to happen to them. The uncertainty is the thing that gets them to talk. If we lay out, in an unclassified version, a description of the techniques by the Attorney General, that description will be in al-Qaida and Hezbollah and all of the other terrorist organizations' playbook. They will train their assets that: This is what you must be expected to do, and Allah wants you to resist these techniques.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BOND. Yes, I am happy to.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Is the Senator aware when he talks about delayed implementation of this program, that there are no CIA detainees? What are we holding up?

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, we are passing this bill so that we can detain people. If we assume one like Khalid Shaikh Mohammed, we have no way to hold him, no way to ask him the questions and get the information we need, because the uncertainty has brought the program to a close. It is vitally important to our security, and unfortunately the Rockefeller amendment would imperil it.

General Hayden promised to come before the committee, and I look forward, in our oversight responsibilities, to hearing how they are implementing this act.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. That is simply not true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, at this juncture, I ask unanimous consent that we step off of this amendment and allow the distinguished Senator from New Mexico to speak for up to 10 minutes regarding the Specter amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I will speak on this vital subject. I rise to speak in support of the Military Commission Act of 2006. First off, we must all ask ourselves a very simple question: Do we believe the United States must have a terrorist attack prevention program?

I submit that the answer is a clear and resounding yes. I believe the American people expect us to have a strong terrorist attack prevention program and that they believe if we don't, we are derelict in our duty. They know that we are at risk, that this is a war, and that there are many people out there who are waiting to do damage and harm to our people. To have anything less than a terrorist prevention program, which is the best we can put together, is shameful. I cannot support any legislation that would prevent the CIA from protecting America and its citizens.

The legislation before us allows the Federal Government to continue using some of the most valuable tools we have in our war on terror—the CIA terrorist interrogation program.

The global war on terror is a new type of war against a new type of enemy, and we must use every tool at our disposal to fight that war—not just some tools, but all of them. These tools include interrogation programs that help us prevent new terrorist attacks. The CIA interrogation program is such a program. It is helping us deny terrorist plans to attack America. It has allowed us to foil at least eight terrorist plots, including plans to attack west coast targets with airplanes, blow up tall buildings across our Nation, use commercial airliners to crash into major airports and bomb our U.S. Marine base in Africa.

Mr. President, clearly, this program is valuable. Clearly, this program is necessary in the global war on terror. We must take legislative action that will allow the Bush Administration to continue. The CIA must be allowed to continue going after those who have information about planned terrorist attacks against our Nation and our friends. The CIA must be allowed to go after those who are in combat with us.

I applaud the White House, the Senate leadership, and the Armed Services Committee for working together to craft a bill that, No. 1, authorizes military tribunals and establishes the trial of detainees; and No. 2, clarifies the standards the CIA must comply with in conducting terrorist interrogations. We must keep the bill in its current form, fending off amendments that would put the CIA’s program in jeopardy.

Regarding the Byrd sunset amendment, we don’t know when the global war on terror will end, so we cannot arbitrarily tie one hand behind the CIA’s arm to continue. The CIA must be allowed to continue after those who have information about planned terrorist attacks against our Nation and our friends. The CIA must be allowed to go after those who are in combat with us.

Additionaly, such petitions are often frivolous and disrupt operations at Guantanamo Bay. Examples of the frivolous petitions that have been filed include an al-Qaida terrorist complaining with some modesty, a long experience of working with the Intelligence Committee, and, as the chairman knows, the chairman and ranking member of the Armed Services Committee have always had a role of participation in his committee. I guess if I can add up all this to just as chairman and ranking—it is about 12 or 15, I think, of my 28 years on the Armed Services Committee. I have watched this committee and have been a participant for many years.

As I read through the amendment offered by our distinguished colleague from West Virginia—he has the title of vice chairman. That came about because the chairman and the vice chairman traditionally on this committee work to achieve the highest degree—I guess the word is the committee working together as an entity.

I say to the chairman, it is my judgment that this amendment is really in the nature of a substitute for the oversight responsibilities of the committee.

As we both know, the world environment changes overnight. This business of trying to operate on the basis of reports is simply, in my judgment, not an effective way for the committee to function.

In consultation with the vice chairman, has to call hearings and meetings and briefings in a matter of hours in order to keep the committee currently informed about world situations.

I say with all due respect to my colleagues here and to our vice chairman of the Intelligence Committee, this amendment is a substitute for the committee’s responsibilities, the basic responsibilities to be performed by this committee. It is for that reason I oppose the amendment. But I would like to have the chairman’s views.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, if the chairman will yield.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. ROBERTS. Let me repeat what I said in my statement—and I share the distinguished Senator’s views, more especially from his experience on both committees, the Intelligence Committee and the Armed Services Committee. We both face the same kind of responsibilities, our oversight responsibilities. We take them very seriously. We may have differences of opinion on the Intelligence Committee or on the Armed Services Committee, but we do our oversight.

The simple fact is that the vice chairman, myself, and other members of the committee—and let me stress now full membership of the committee; we worked very hard to get that access—have been fully briefed in the past and the present and also prospectively of the CIA’s detention and interrogation operations.

The vice chairman and other members of the Intelligence Committee, if people have problems, if people have questions, if people need to get more briefs, if people want to basically get into some—I say “some” because I think some of the questions are not reasonable—say they have questions about this, all they have to do is ask. I can guarantee as chairman that those in charge of this particular program at the CIA will be there and have been there.

The inspector general of the CIA has briefed the committee—I am not going to get into the details of that briefing—both the vice chair and myself in regards to any question on what has happened, the situation apparently as I see it, the situation has happened, whether it is alleged or otherwise with the interrogation and detention program, and we get an update as to where are those cases. If there was egregious behavior, what is happening to those people? Are they being prosecuted? And the answer to that is yes.

All we have to do is ask. As I look at this, I must say in scope, it is unprecedented. They ask questions that I think must be asked, quite frankly. It is going interrogator working within the confines of the Central Intelligence Agency, would have a very chilling effect on me to know that four times a year I would be held responsible for all of these questions which are in charge at the Agency can certainly respond to any committee request in terms of a briefing. I would be a little nervous.

And that is not the case because, as I said in my remarks, the CIA will not be detecting and inviding unlawful alien combatants; it will be writing one report after another, four times a year. If we look at the length, breadth, and depth, it is not whether we get this information, it is how we get the information. All we have to do is ask.

This is a tremendous burden. I must tell my colleagues that I don’t know where we are going to get enough staff on the committee to respond to these kinds of questions. I think it is going to be a rather unique situation when we have a lot of work to do. We have briefings, as the Senator from Virginia indicated, every week. We have one this afternoon—it is terribly important—referred by my colleague. I think we are going to have to hire more people to do this if, in fact, we do this, and I think the CIA will as well.

I am not too sure, again, if I were an individual interrogator that I would want to stay in the business. Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I thank my colleague. Another observation of all of us who have had the responsibility of being a chairman and ranking member is that it is sometimes difficult to get witnesses to appear, but I found thus far, certainly with General Hayden—and I have known him for a number of years—I have a high degree of confidence in his ability to administer the Agency, the CIA. It is of great importance to this Senator because it is in Virginia, if I may say. I view the agency and each and every one of its employees as someone for whom I have an obligation to speak on their behalf when necessary.

I find that General Hayden is very forthcoming, very responsive. When the Chair and ranking member desire to see him, my understanding is he makes himself available. It is not as if we have to wait until a report comes, read it, and then decide to bring him down. The Chair, in consultation with the ranking member—he and his team are quite responsive; am I not correct in that?

Mr. ROBERTS. I am happy to respond to the distinguished chairman. What he has described is accurate. It is not a matter of people not being responsive to the committee. It is the fact that—I don’t want to call it a book report, but that is about where we are. It is on some very important matters. I know members of the committee feel very strongly about this. I can’t recall a time when members on this committee have asked me for help to get information from the executive or from the CIA or from any of our intelligence agencies where I haven’t worked overtime to get that job done.

I thank the chairman for his question.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague. I think we have framed for the full Senate the parameters of what I regard are the points to be considered at such time we vote on this amendment.

On that matter, I see the distinguished vice chairman and my colleague. How much time remains under the control of the Senator from Virginia?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is 8½ minutes remaining under the control of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, if I might speak for 2 or 3 minutes, the PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I have a one-page summary. Some of the arguments I have heard are absolutely incredible. The fact of the matter is there isn’t any reporting done. For 4 years this has gone on. People say: Just call them in; call in the head of the CIA, whoever it is, before the committee. That doesn’t yield information. We have so many requests for information from the CIA that have not been responsive to the committee because they don’t want to be responsive to the committee, because they are directed not
I just want to ask my good friend from West Virginia if he heard the chairman of the Intelligence Committee say that all we have to do is ask for reports and we will get them. Did I hear that right?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. The Senator from Michigan heard that correctly.

Mr. LEVIN. Well, Mr. President, just one example here. I have been trying to get a memo called the second Bybee memo now for 2½ years. I haven’t asked, I haven’t asked twice. I have probably asked a dozen times for the Bybee memo, and my good friend, the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, has asked for the Bybee memo, without any luck. So the idea that all we have to do is ask is just simply wrong.

Chairman WARNER asked on May 13, 2004—2004—that all legal reviews and related documentation concerning approval of interrogation techniques be provided to the committee. It has never been provided.

On April 12, 2005, I submitted questions to John Negroponte, who was the nominee for the Director of National Intelligence, requesting to see if the intelligence community has copies of the so-called Bybee memo.

In April of 2005, I asked General Hayden, on his nomination to be Deputy National Intelligence Director, to see if he could determine if the intelligence community has a copy of the second Bybee memo and to provide it to the committee.

Then on the intelligence budget hearing, April 28, 2005, I asked Secretary Cambone: Can you get us a copy of the second Bybee memo? This has to do with what interrogation techniques are legal. This is written by the Office of Legal Counsel, this memo. He says he will get a reply to me. That was April 2005.

In May of 2005, I wrote the Director of Central Intelligence, Porter Goss, requesting the second Bybee memo. Then I get a letter from the Director of Congressional Affairs, Joe Whipple, saying the memorandum can only be released by the Department of Justice. So in July, I write the Department of Justice, the Attorney General: Can we get a copy of the second Bybee memo? Letter after letter after letter.

Then there is a hearing by the Senate Intelligence Committee, July 2005. This is a hearing to consider his nomination to be general counsel in the Office of the Director of National Intelligence. I asked Mr. Powell: Can you provide us for the record a copy of that second Bybee memo? That decision, we are told a week later, is not a decision he can make; that is within the Department of Justice’s purview, and on it goes.

Another year of stonewalling, of denial, of coverup by the Department of Justice. Of a memo which is critically important, according to press reports and according now also to the acknowledgment by the Department of Justice. It sets a legal framework for the interrogation of detainees, and the Senate can’t get a copy.

Apparently, two Members of the Senate, the chairman and vice chairman of the Intelligence Committee, have seen this memo. That is it. Members of the Intelligence Committee can’t get it. Members of the Armed Services Committee can’t get it. All we have to do is ask? How many times do we have to ask before we get documents?

There are 70 documents we still can’t get from the Department of Defense relative to the Watergate Pei shop. All we have to do is ask? There are documents we have asked of the Intelligence Committee for years beyond the Bybee amendment without any response.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, in consultation with my distinguished ranking member, I would like to inquire if there is further debate desired on this amendment. If not, my understanding is the leadership will select a time—joint leadership—for votes on this amendment and others at some point this afternoon, and with the full expectation that this matter will be voted on final passage.

So at this time, could I inquire as to the time for the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Michigan?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time is 18 minutes for the Senator from Virginia and 5 minutes 10 seconds for the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from West Virginia as to whether, if he has completed debate on this amendment, he would be willing to yield the balance of his time to the Senator from Michigan for use on the bill?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I would, with the exception of 1 minute to summarize just before we vote on it, so you can have the balance of the time.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the balance of the time of the Senator from West Virginia be so ordered.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I would make a similar request that the balance of my time be allocated to me for use on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I would make a similar request that the balance of my time be allocated to me for use on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WARNER. Therefore, I believe all time has been yielded back on both sides, and we can prepare the floor now for the receiving of an amendment.
from the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 5088

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I believe my amendment No. 5088 is at the desk, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] proposes an amendment numbered 5088.

The amendment is as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 5088

(Purpose: To provide for the protection of United States persons in the implementation of treaty obligations)

On page 83, between lines 8 and 9, insert the following:

(2) PROTECTION OF UNITED STATES PERSONS.—The Secretary of State shall notify other parties to the Geneva Conventions that—

(A) the United States has historically interpreted the law of war and the Geneva Conventions, including in particular common Article 3, to prohibit a wide variety of cruel, inhuman, and degrading treatment of members of the United States Armed Forces and United States citizens;

(B) following previous armed conflicts, the United States Government has prosecuted persons for engaging in cruel, inhuman, and degrading treatment, including the use of waterboarding techniques, stress positions, including prolonged standing, the use of extreme temperatures, beatings, sleep deprivation, and other similar acts.

(C) this Act and the amendments made by this Act preserve the capacity of the United States to prosecute nationals of enemy powers for engaging in acts against members of the United States Armed Forces and United States citizens that have been prosecuted by the United States as war crimes in the past; and

(D) should any United States person to whom the Geneva Conventions apply be subjected to any of the following acts, the United States would consider such act to constitute a punishable offense under common Article 3 and would act accordingly.

Such acts, each of which is prohibited by the Army Field Manual include forcing the person to perform sexual acts, or pose in a sexual manner; applying beatings, electric shock, burns, or other forms of physical pain; waterboarding; using dogs; inducing hypothermia or heat injury; conducting mock executions; depriving the person of necessary food, water, and medical care.

These techniques are prohibited by the Department of Defense. Those techniques are prohibited from being used against adversaries in any kind of a conflict, blatant violations the requirement to do this, those we capture, and what I would consider to be torture. Certainly the Army and Department of Defense have effectively found that out that these techniques do not work. They have banned them and there has not been any use of it.

What does our amendment say? Well, it says we in the United States are not going to tolerate those techniques if any of our military personnel are captured. But not all of the who people who are representing the United States in the war on terror are wearing a uniform. For example, we have SEALs, we have some special operations, special forces, we have CIA agents. We have contractors and aid workers. We have more people around the world looking out for our security interests than any other country in the world.

What does this amendment say? Well, if our military personnel are not going to do this, those we capture, we are saying to countries around the world: You cannot do this against any American personnel you are going to capture in this war on terror, or in any other conflict. This amendment is about protecting people who are involved in the war on terror. It is saying to foreign countries: If you use any of these techniques, the United States will say this is a war crime and you will be held accountable. How can anybody be against that? This administration has sown confusion about our commitments to the Geneva Conventions, so that protection does not exist now. That protection does not exist now, Restoring that protection is basically what this amendment is all about.

I am not going to take much time, but I just want to remind our colleagues about how we viewed some of these techniques in our conflicts in previous wars.

On the issue of waterboarding, the United States charged Yukio Asano, a Japanese officer on May 1 to 28, 1947, with war crimes. The offenses were recounted by John Henry Burton, a civilian victim:

After taking me down into the hallway they laid me out on a stretcher and strapped me on. The stretcher was then stood on end with my head almost touching the floor and my feet in the air. Then they began pouring water over my face and at times it was impossible for me to breathe without sucking in water. The torture continued and continued. Yukio Asano was sentenced to fifteen years of hard labor. We punished people with fifteen years earlier when waterboarding was used against Americans in World War II.

What about the case of Mutsukichi Muta, another Japanese officer, tried on April 15 to 25, 1947, for, among other charges, causing a prisoner to receive shocks of electricity and beating prisoners. Shocks of electricity. He was sentenced to death by hanging. Death by hanging. We could go on.

In another case prosecuted from March 3 to April 30, 1948—the Japanese officer was sentenced for exposing prisoners to extreme cold temperatures, forcing them to spend long periods of time in the nude, making the prisoner stand in the cold for long periods of time, hour after hour, and putting ice on him and inducing hypothermia. This officer received 15 years of hard labor. Fifteen years.

We didn’t tolerate those abuses, and we should not tolerate those abuses inflicted on any Americans who are going to be taken in the war on terror. That is what this amendment is all about. It will tell the Secretary of State to notify every signatory from 194 nations, that if any of their governments are going to use any of these techniques on Americans that are taken in this war on terror, that we will consider this a violation of the Geneva Conventions and that they will be accountable.

This is to protect our servicemen and servicewomen, those who are in the intelligence agencies, those performing dangerous duties, those who are not wearing the uniform in their battle against terror. We are putting everyone on notice.

We did not make up this list. All these techniques are taken right out of the Defense Department’s code of conduct for interrogations.

I would take more time and review for my colleagues, where we tried individuals in World War II and sentenced individuals who performed these kinds of abuses on Americans to long periods of incarceration and even to death. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, at this moment I suggest the absence of a quorum, with the time not chargeable to either side.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

Mr. WARNER. I beg your pardon. I thought my colleague yielded the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. I did. If you want to yield your time, I wouldn’t object to it, but I object if you are calling for equal time, and I object to it.

Mr. WARNER. No, I said charged to neither side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, do I have additional time? How much time have I used?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 18 minutes 20 seconds remaining on the time of the Senator.

Mr. KENNEDY. I would like to yield myself 5 more minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, it will be quite surprising to me if the Senate is not prepared to accept this amendment. I look back at the time that we actually passed the War Crimes Act of 1996. At that time it was offered by Walter B. Jones, a Republican Congressman. It was offered in response to our Vietnam experience, where American servicemen—including one of our own colleagues and dear friends, Senator McCain—had been subjected to torture during that period of time.

When this matter came up, both in the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States, it passed in the Senate of the United States without a single objection. It passed the House by voice vote. This is what it says, under War Crimes, chapter 118:

> Whoever, whether inside or outside the United States, commits a war crime . . .

And it talks about the circumstances:

> . . . as a member of the armed forces of the United States or a national United States. It is in Title 18 so those out of uniform are subject to the code.

So that is the CIA. Those are the SEALs. Those are the people involved now in our war on terror. Then it continues along to define a war crime as a violation of Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions. That provision protects against cruel treatment and torture. It prevents the taking of hostages. It prohibits outrages upon personal dignity. Those are effectively the kinds of protections that act affords.

We heard a great deal from the administration during that period of time. We have the circumstances in Guantanamo—the conduct of General Miller, who brought these harsh interrogation techniques to Guantanamo at Secretary Rumsfeld’s direction. When the Armed Services Committee questioned his whole standard of conduct, he said he was forced to retire early to avoid coming up and facing the music. This caused confusion about our commitments to the Geneva Conventions.

Then you had the Bybee memorandum, which was effectively the rule of law for some 2 years, which permitted torture, any kind of torture, and it said that any individual who is going to be involved in torturing would be absolved from any kind of criminality if the purpose of their abusing anyone was to get information and there was no specific intent to have bodily harm for that individual. This caused confusion about our commitments to the Geneva Conventions.

That was the Bybee amendment. Finally, Attorney General Gonzales had to repudiate that or he never would have been approved as the Attorney General of the United States. That is the record in the Judiciary Committee. I sat through those hearings. I heard the Attorney General say they were repudiating the Bybee memorandum on that.

This is against a considerable background of where we have seen some extraordinary abuses.

Then we have tried to clarify our commitment. We have the action in the Senate of the United States, by a vote of 90 to 9, accepting Senator McCain’s Amendment to prohibit cruel, inhumane, and degrading treatment; to make the Army Field Manual the law of the land; to say we are not interested in torture. Senator MCCAIN understands. He believes that waterboarding is torture. He believes using dogs is torture. This is not complicated. We don’t have to cause confusion. We have it written down on this list of prohibited techniques. It is not my list of prohibited techniques, but it is written down by the Department of Defense. This amendment says if a foreign country is going to practice these kinds of behavior against an American who is out there in the war on terror and is being picked up, we are going to consider this to be a war crime. This is about protecting Americans.

I don’t understand the hesitancy on the other side, not being willing to accept this amendment. Let’s go on the record about what we say is absolutely prohibited and what we know has been favored techniques that have been used by our adversaries at other times. Let’s go on the record for clarity.

Looking back in history, at the end of World War II and otherwise, we are all familiar with the different examples where these techniques—frighteningly familiar to the series of techniques used in Iraq and Guantanamo—and are often frequently used against Americans.

I am reminded—I gave illustrations: electric shocks, waterboarding, hypothermia, heat injury. We all remember the 52 American hostages who were held in the U.S. Embassy in Iran. They were subjected to the mock executions. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has used 5 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I hope we could accept this amendment. I yield myself 1 more minute.

It basically incorporates what the Senate did several years ago with war crimes. It is trying to respond to what the President says. He wants specificity about what is going to be prohibited and what will not be.

The Department of Defense has found these areas to be off limits for the military. All we are saying is if other countries are going to do that to Americans, they are going to be held accountable.

This is about protecting Americans. That is the least we ought to be able to do for those who are risking their lives in very difficult circumstances.

I yield the floor.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent that the time not be charged to either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, the Senate is currently debating a bill on how we treat detainees in our custody, and, more broadly, on how we treat the principles on which our Nation was founded.

The implications are far reaching for our national security interests abroad; the rights of Americans at home, our reputation in the world; and the safety of our troops.

The threat posed by the evil and nihilistic movement that has spawned terrorism networks is real and gravely serious. We must do all we can to defeat the enemy with all the tools in our arsenal and every resource at our disposal. All of us are dedicated to defeating this enemy.

The challenge before us on this bill, in the final days of session before the November election, is to rise above partisanship and find a solution that serves our national security interests. I fear that there are those who place a strategy for winning elections ahead of a smart strategy for winning the war on terrorism.

Democrats and Republicans alike believe that terrorists must be caught, captured, and sentenced. I believe that there can be no mercy for those who perpetrated 9/11 and other crimes against humanity. But in the process of accomplishing that I believe we must hold on to our values and set an example we can point to with pride not ashamed. Those captured are nowhere—they are in jail now—so we should follow the duty given us by the Supreme Court and carefully craft the right piece of legislation to try them. The President acted without authority and it is up to us to rise to the challenge of handling this President just the right amount of authority to get the job done and no more.

During the Revolutionary War, between the signing of the Declaration of Independence, which set our founding ideals to paper, and the writing of our Constitution, which fortified these ideals under the rule of law, our values—our beliefs as Americans—were already being tested.

We were at war and victory was hardly assured, in fact the situation was the opposite. New York City and Long Island had been captured. General George Washington and the Continental Army retreated across New Jersey into Pennsylvania, suffering tremendous casualties and a body blow to the cause of American independence.

It was at this time, among these solders at this moment of defeat and despair, that Thomas Paine would write, “These are the times that try men’s souls.” Soon afterward, Washington lead his soldiers across the Delaware River and onto victory in the Battle of Trenton. There he captured nearly 1,000 foreign mercenaries and he faced a crucial choice.

How would General Washington treat these men? The British had already committed atrocities against Americans, including torture. As David Hackett Fischer describes in his Pulitzer Prize-winning book, “...Trenton’s Crossing,” thousands of American prisoners of war were “treated with extreme cruelty by British captors.”

There are accounts of injured soldiers who surrendered being murdered instead of quartered, countless Americans dying in prison hulks in New York harbor, starvation and other acts of inhumanity perpetrated against Americans confined to churches in New York City.

Can you imagine.

The light of our ideals shone dimly in those early dark days, years from an end to the conflict, years before our improbable triumph and the birth of our democracy.

General Washington wasn’t that far from where the Continental Congress had met and signed the Declaration of Independence. But it is easy to imagine how far that must have seemed. General Washington announced a decision unique in human history, sending the following order for handling prisoners:

“Treat them with humanity, and let them have no reason to complain of our Copying the brutal example of the British Army in their treatment of our unfortunate brethren.”

Therefore, George Washington, our commander-in-chief before he was our President, laid down the indelible marker of our Nation’s values even as we were struggling to be a Nation—and his courageous act reminds us that America was born out of faith in certain basic principles. In fact, it is these principles that made and still make our country exceptional and allow us to serve as an example. We are not bound together as a nation by bloodlines. We are not bound by ancient history; our Nation is a new nation. Above all, we are bound by our values.

George Washington understood that how you treat enemy combatants can reverberate around the world. We must convict and punish the guilty in a way that reinforces their guilt before the world and does not undermine our constitutional values.

There is another element to this. I can’t go back in history and read General Washington’s mind, of course, but one purpose of the rule of law is to organize a society’s response to violence. Allowing coercion, coercive treatment, and torturous actions toward prisoners not only violates the fundamental rule of law and the institutionalization of justice, but it helps to radicalize those who are tortured.

Zawahiri, bin Laden’s second in command, the architect of many of the attacks on our country, throughout Europe and the world, has said repeatedly that it is his experience that torture of innocents is central to radicalization. Zawahiri has said over and again that being tortured is at the root of jihadi; the experience of being tortured has a long history of serving radicalized populations; abusing prisoners is a prime cause of radicalization.

For the safety of our soldiers and the reputation of our Nation, it is far more important to take the time to do this job right than to do it quickly and badly. There is no reason we need to rush to judgment. This broken process and the violent politics behind it will cost our Nation dearly. I fear also that it will cost our men and women in uniform. The Supreme Court laid out clearly what it expected from us.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD letters and statements from former military leaders that the Administration will uphold the requirements of Common Article 3, so as to down grade those standards. We urge you to reject this effort.

Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions provides the minimum standards for humane treatment and fair justice that apply to anyone captured in armed conflict. These standards were specifically designed to ensure that those who capture the other, more extensive, protections of the Conventions are treated in accordance with the values of civilized nations. The framers of the Geneva Conventions, American representatives, in particular wanted to ensure that Common Article 3 would apply in situations where a state party to the treaty, like the United States, fights an adversary that is not a party, including irregular forces like al Qaeda. The United States military has abided by the basic requirements of Common Article 3 in every conflict since the Conventions were adopted. In each case, we applied the Geneva Conventions—including, at a minimum, Common Article 3—even to enemies that systematically violated the Conventions themselves.

We have abided by this standard in our own conduct for a simple reason: the same standard serves to protect American servicemen and women when they engage in conflicts covered by Common Article 3. Protecting the integrity and honor of our men and women has become increasingly important in recent years when our adversaries often are not nation-states. Congress acted in 1997 to further this goal by criminalizing the use of Common Article 3 in the War Crimes Act, enabling us to hold accountable those who abuse our captured personnel, no matter the nature of the armed conflict.

If any agency of the U.S. government is excused from compliance with these standards, or if we seek to redefine what Common Article 3 requires, we should be sure that our enemies will take notice of the technical distinctions when they hold U.S. prisoners captive. If degradation, humiliation, physical or mental brutality toward prisoners is decriminalized or considered permissible under a restrictive interpretation of Common Article 3, we will forfeit all credible objections and the legal consequences be inflicted upon American prisoners.

This is not just a theoretical concern. We have people deployed right now in theaters where Common Article 3 is the only source of legal protection they should be captured. If we fail to uphold these requirements, then such soldiers should face the same fate that has been inflicted upon American prisoners.

Last week, the Department of Defense issued a Directive reaffirming that the military will uphold the requirements of Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions in its custody. We welcome this new policy. Our servicemen and women have operated for too long with unclear and unlawful guidance on detainee treatment, and some have been left to take the blame when things went wrong. The guidance is now clear.

But that clarity will be short-lived if the approach taken by Administration’s bill prevails. In contrast to the Pentagon’s new rules governing detention, the bill would limit our definition of Common Article 3’s terms by introducing a flexible, sliding scale that might allow certain coercive interrogation techniques in some circumstances, while forbidding them under others. This would replace an absolute standard—Common Article 3—with a relative one. To do so will only create further confusion.

Moreover, were we to take this step, we would be viewed by the rest of the world as having formally renounced the clear standards of the Geneva Conventions. Our enemies would be encouraged to interpret the Conventions in their own way as well, placing our troops in jeopardy in future conflicts. And American moral authority in the war would be further damaged.

All of this is unnecessary. As the senior serving Judge Advocates General recently testified, our armed forces have trained to Common Article 3 and can live within its requirements while waging the war on terror effectively.

As the United States has greater exposure militarily than any other nation, we have long emphasized the reciprocal nature of the Geneva Conventions. That is why we believe—and the United States has always asserted—that a broad interpretation of Common Article 3 is vital to the safety of U.S. personnel. But the Administration’s bill would put us on the opposite side of that argument. We urge you to consider the impact that redefining Common Article 3 would have on Americans who put their lives at risk in defense of our Nation. We believe their interests, and their safety and protection should be your highest priority as you address this issue.

THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE, New York, NY, September 27, 2006. Dare senator: We write on behalf of the American Jewish Committee, a national human relations organization with over 150,000 members and supporters represented by 32 regional chapters, to urge you to oppose the compromise Military Commissions Act of 2006, S. 3930, and to vote against attaching the bill to H.R. 6601, absent correcting amendments.

To be sure, compromise that produced the current bill resulted in the welcome addition of provisions making clear that the humane treatment standards of Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions guide the standards for the floor for the treatment of detainees as well as specifying that serious violations are war crimes. Nevertheless, S. 3930 is unacceptable as specifying that serious violations are war crimes. Nevertheless, S. 3930 is unacceptable in its present form for the following reasons:

The bill arguably opens the door to the use of interrogation techniques prohibited by the Geneva Conventions. It permits the prosecution to introduce evidence of guilt obtained by coercion in military commissions obtained by coercive techniques in contravention of constitutional standards and international treaty. It permits the prosecution to introduce evidence that has not been provided to a defendant in a form sufficient to allow him or her to participate in the preparation of his or her defense.

It unduly restricts defendants’ access to exculpatory evidence available to the government.

It unduly restricts access to the courts by habeas corpus and appeal.

It interprets the definition of Common Article 3 violations to exclude sexual assaults such as those that occurred at Abu Ghraib.

There is no doubt that the authorities entrusted with the security of the United States and the resources and tools necessary to protect us from the serious threat that terrorists continue to pose to all Americans, and, indeed, the civilized world. But the homeland can be secured in a fashion consistent with the values of due process and fair treatment in military commissions, by braiding the interests of our defense counsel, prosecutors and judges in mind particularly the position of our members who may be called upon to serve as defense counsel, prosecutors and judges in the commissions process, and the interests of our members who may The current legislative project continues to caution and proper deliberation in the legislative process and urged that a commission be secured and followed in the bill's finalization.

It is essential guarantor of justice.

The draft also seeks to strike the ability of detainees with no recourse should they receive cruel and inhuman treatment. It is an essential guarantor of justice in difficult cases, particularly in a conflict of indefinite duration, possibly for generations. Holding individuals without according them any right to seek review of their status or conditions of detention raises fundamental questions of justice. This concern is compounded by the draft's provision that the Geneva Convention is unenforceable, thus leaving detainees with no recourse should they receive cruel and inhuman treatment.

On July 19, 2006, Michael Mernin, the chair of our Committee on Military Affairs and Justice, testified before the Senate Armed Services Committee concerning this legislative initiative. He appealed at that time for caution and proper deliberation in the legislative process and urged that a commission of military law experts be convened to advise Congress on the weighty issues presented. The committee project was intended to show severe flaws which are likely to prove embarrassing to the United States if it is enacted. We therefore strongly urge that the matter of careful consideration before it is acted upon and that the advice of prominent military justice and international humanitarian law experts be secured and followed in the bill's finalization.

Very truly yours,

BARRY KAMINS
President.

Re Evangelical religious leaders speak out on cruel, inhuman, degrading treatment.

DEAR MEMBERS OF CONGRESS: The Congress faces a defining question of morality in the coming months. Americans are right to be furious that the United States has inflicted cruel and degrading treatment on suspected terrorist detainees.

We are writing to express our support for the approach taken on this issue by Senators McCain, Warner and Graham and a strong, bipartisan majority of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

We read credible reports—some from FBI agents—that prisoners have been stripped naked, sexually humiliated, chained to the floor, and left to defecate on themselves. These and other practices like “waterboarding” (in which a detainee is made to feel as if he is being drowned) may cast America’s values into question. But not these practices are cruel, inhuman, and degrading.

Today, the question before the Congress is whether it will support Sen. McCain’s efforts to make it clear to the world that the U.S. has outlawed such abuse or support an Administration proposal which creates grave ambiguity about who the terrorists are, this is about who we are. We urge you to reject the Administration’s ill-conceived proposals which will make us both less safe and less proud as a nation.

Sincerely,

James and Patricia Perry, Anna M. McKernan, Marion Kminek, Allison Rosenberger-Torres, Kelly Campbell, Bruce Wallace, John M. Leinung, Kristen Breitweiser, Patricia Casazza, Michael McCasazza, Loretta J. Filipov, Joan Glick

Re Evangelical religious leaders speak out on cruel, inhuman, degrading treatment.

As Christians from the evangelical tradition, we support Senator McCain and his colleagues in their effort to prevent the moral and political implications and that are intended to preserve options that some would rather not politically defend.

The terrorist attacks of September 11 were one of the most heinous acts ever visited upon this nation. The Commander in Chief and his U.S. administrative tools and policies to fight a committed, well-resourced, and immoral terrorist threat. At the same time, the President must also defend the deepest and best values of our moral tradition.

For the safety of our soldiers and the reputation of our Nation, it is far more important to take the time to do the job right than to do it quickly and badly. There is no reason other than partisanship for not continuing deliberating to find a solution that works to achieve a true consensus based on American values.

In the last several days, the bill has undergone countless changes—all for the worse—and differs significantly from a bill brokered between the Bush administration and a few Senate Republicans last week.

We cannot have a serious debate over a bill that has been hastily written with little opportunity for serious review. To vote on a proposal that evolved by the hour, on an issue that is so important, is an insult to the American people, to the Senate, to our troops, and to our Nation.

To large extent, I know we are holding this hugely important debate in the backdrop of November’s elections. There are some in this body more focused on holding on to their jobs than doing their jobs right. Some in this body who need to use our honor and serious concerns for protecting our country and our troops as a political wedge issue to divide us for electoral gain.

How can we in the Senate find a proper answer and reach a consensus when any matter that does not serve the majority’s partisan advantage is mocked as weakness, and any true concern for our troops and values dismissed demagogically as coddling the enemy?

This broken process and its blatant politics will cost our Nation dearly. It allows a discredited policy ruled by the Supreme Court to be unconstitutional to their heart and under threat. We must show that we uphold our most profound values.

We need a set of rules that will stand up to judicial scrutiny. We in this Chamber know that a hastily written bill driven by partisanship will not withstand the scrutiny of judicial oversight. We need a set of rules that will protect our values, protect our security, and protect our troops. We need a set of rules that recognizes how serious and dangerous the threat is, and enhances, not undermines, our chances to deter and defeat our enemies.

Our Supreme Court in its Hamdan v. Rumsfeld ruled that the Bush administration’s previous military commission system had failed to follow the Constitution and the law in its treatment of detainees.

As the Supreme Court noted, the Bush administration has been operating under a system that undermines our Nation’s commitment to the rule of law.

The question before us is whether this Congress will follow the decision of the Supreme Court and create a better system that withstands judicial examination—or attempt to confound that decision, a strategy destined to fail again.

The bill before us allows the admission into evidence of statements derived through cruel, inhuman and degrading interrogation. That sets a dangerous precedent that will endanger our own men and women in uniform overseas. Will our enemies be less likely to surrender? Will informants be less likely to come forward? Will our soldiers be more likely to face torture if captured? Will “humiliating and degrading treatment”—sets out an intolerable vague standard on which to base criminal liability, and may expose CIA agents to prosecution for rough interrogation tactics used in questioning detainees.

The bill makes it a federal crime for any soldier or national of the U.S. to violate, among other things, Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions in an armed conflict not of an international character. The administration has voiced concern that Common Article—which prohibits “cruel treatment or torture,” “outrages against human dignity,” and “humiliating and degrading treatment”—sets out an intolerable vague standard on which to base criminal liability, and may expose CIA agents to criminal charges.

For the safety of our soldiers and the reputation of our Nation, it is far more important to take the time to do the job right than to do it quickly and badly. There is no reason other than partisanship for not continuing deliberating to find a solution that works to achieve a true consensus based on American values.

As the Supreme Court noted, the Bush administration has been operating under a system that undermines our Nation’s commitment to the rule of law.
We will not give up who we are. We will not be shaken by fear and intimidation. We will not give one inch to the evil and nihilistic extremists who have set their sights on our way of life.

I say with confidence and without fear that we are the United States of America, and that we stand now and forever for our enduring values to people around the world, to our friends, to our enemies, to anyone and everyone.

Before George Washington crossed the Delaware, before he could achieve that long-needed victory, before the tide would turn, before he ordered that prisoners be treated humanely, he ordered that his soldiers read Thomas Paine’s writing. He ordered that they read about the ideals for which they would fight, the principles at stake, the importance of this American project.

Now we find ourselves at a moment when we feel threatened, when the world seems to have grown more dangerous, when our Nation needs to ready itself for a long and difficult struggle against a new and dangerous enemy that means us great harm.

Just as Washington faced a hard choice, up to us to decide how we wage this struggle and not up to the fear fostered by terrorists. We decide.

This is a moment where we need to remind ourselves of the confidence, fearlessness, and bravery of George Washington—then we will know that we cannot, we must not, subvert our ideals—we can and must use them to win.

Finally, we have a choice before us. I hope we make the right choice. I fear that we will not; that we will be once again back in the Supreme Court, and we will be once again held up to the world as failing our own high standards.

When our soldiers face an enemy, when our soldiers are in danger, will that enemy surrender if he thinks he will be tortured? Will he continue to fight? How will our men and women be treated?

I hope we both pass the right kind of legislation and understand that it may very well determine whether we win this war against terror and protect or troops who are valiantly fighting for us.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask unanimous consent that it not be charged to either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the Kennedy amendment would require the Secretary of State to notify other countries around the world that seven specific categories of actions, each of which is specifically prohibited by the Army Field Manual, are punishable offenses under common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions that would be prosecuted if applied to any United States person. Those seven categories of actions are: (1) Forcing the detainee to be naked, perform sexual acts, or pose in a sexual manner; (2) applying beatings, electric shock, burns, or other forms of physical pain; (3) “waterboarding”; (4) using military working dogs; (5) inducing hypothermia or heat injury; (6) conducting mock executions; and (7) depriving the detainee of necessary food, water, or medical care.

I listened very carefully to what my colleague from Virginia, the Chairman of the Armed Services Committee, had to say about this amendment. He stated:

Now Senator Kennedy’s amendment, depending on how it is worded, and I’m on the opinion that this chamber will reject it, I don’t want that rejection to be misconstrued by the world in any way as asserting that the practices listed in the amendment are consistent with the Geneva Convention or that they could legitimately be employed against our troops or anyone else. . . . We must not leave that impression as a consequence of the decisions soon to be made by way of vote on the Kennedy amendment. The types of conduct described in this amendment, in my opinion, are in the category of grave breaches of Common Article Three of the Geneva Convention. These are clearly prohibited by the bill.

I am in complete agreement with Senator WARNER that each of these practices is a grave breach of Common Article 3. I agree that these practices are unlawful today and that they will continue to be unlawful if this bill is enacted into law.

However, I am concerned that the administration may have muddied the record on these issues through its unwillingness to clearly state what practices are permitted, and what practices are prohibited, under Common Article 3. While I reach the same conclusion as Senator WARNER as to the lawfulness of the practices listed in the Kennedy amendment, I am afraid that others around the world may not.

We agree that these practices are prohibited by Common Article 3. We need to send a clear message to the world that this is the case, so that the rest of the world will abide by the same standard. That is why I strongly support the Kennedy amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ten minutes remain under the Senator’s control.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mr. President, I want to point out why this is so necessary and so essential.

In reviewing the underlying legislation, if you look under the provisions dealing with definitions on page 76 and 71, and then read on, you will find that it is difficult to read that without having a sense of the kind of vagueness which I think surrounds prohibited interrogation techniques. It talks about substantive risks and does not mention physical injury. But the statute does not have specifics to define the areas which are prohibited. The techniques in my amendment are the same ones the Department of the Army and, to my best knowledge, our colleague and friend from Arizona has identified. Voting for my amendment would provide those specifics.

The President has asked for specificity, but he has refused to say whether Congress Article 3 would prohibit these kinds of acts. That has left the world doubting our commitment to Common Article 3 and has endangered our people around the globe—those who are working for the United States in the war on terror.

We interpret the legislation so that any country in the world that has signed on to the Geneva Conventions, any of those countries that are going to practice activities prohibited by the field manual, that I consider to be torture, are going to be held by the United States interrogation committing a war crime. This is important. It is essential. It is necessary.

The general concept was improved without objection a number of years ago in the wake of the Vietnam situation, regarding the definition of war crimes. We ought to restate and recommit ourselves to protecting Americans involved in the war on terror and ensure they will not be subject to these activities.

At the present time, without this amendment, it will be left open. If we accept this amendment, it would make it clear it is prohibited. That is what we should do. I withhold the remainder of my time.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and that it not be chargeable to either side.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the pending amendment be laid aside so that I may offer an amendment:

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I will not object, I would simply like to make it clear in laying aside the amendment the times remaining under the control of the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Michigan remain in place. We will now, to accommodate our distinguished senior colleague, go off of the Kennedy amendment and proceed to the Byrd amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would be the case.

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. S710

(Purpose: To prohibit the establishment of new military commissions after December 31, 2011)

MR. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the Chair, and I also thank my very able and distinguished friend from Virginia.

Mr. President, I shall offer an amendment today that provides a 5-year sun-set to any Presidential authorization of any military commission enacted under the legislation currently being debated. To establish which I shall offer is essential to the ability of the Congress to retain its power of oversight and as an important check on future executive actions.

As we stand here now, Members are readying themselves to beat a path home to their States—I understand that—so they may get in their final politicking. Unfortunately, though, in the feverish climate of a looming election, the most important business of the Senate may suffer. I have seen that happen over the years. This is no surprise. We have seen before the fever of politics can undermine the serious business of the Congress once November and the winds of November draw nigh. We have seen the mistakes that can come when Congress rushes to legislate without the benefit of thorough vetting by committees, without adequate debate, without the opportunity to offer amendments.

Likewise, when legislation is pushed as a means of political showboating—we all know what that is—instead of by a diligent commitment to our constitutional duties, the results can be disastrous.

In fact, there have been various proposals to bring congressional oversight to the military tribunals which were first authorized in November, 2001. Senators SPECTER, LEAHY, and DURBIN were instrumental in attempting to push back against unilateral action by the President to establish these commissions. These attempts were to reassert the power of the Congress—yes, the constitutional duty embodied in Article I of this Constitution that is vested in the Congress and in the Congress alone, to make our country’s laws and specifically to make rules concerning captures on land and water.

Let me say that again. I will repeat the verbiage of the Constitution: to make our country’s laws and specifically to make rules concerning captures on land and water.

Nothing came of these proposals. Since then, the Congress has ignored its responsibilities and this most important issue has been shoved aside.

What is this new impetus spurring congressional action and a renewed interest in the issue? Did Congress find its way back to embracing its Article I duties? Did the Senate—no, Mr. President, I will not even dozed, the Senate, wake up to realize it is not within its purview to dictate the laws of the land? No. It was the Supreme Court’s decision in the Hamdan case.

While the President grabbed the wheel, the Court stepped in to remind us of the separation of powers and the constitutional role of each branch, thank God. Yes, thank God for the separation of powers envisioned by our forefathers.

Thank God for the Supreme Court. Yes, I said this before; I say it again: Thank God for the Supreme Court.

It is no coincidence that the traditional pathways of legislation through the committee and amendment process and ample opportunity for debate are the best defense against the enactment of bad, bills.

This is the way the Senate was designed to operate and this is how it separates in the best interests of the people.

Unfortunately, because of the timing of the Supreme Court’s decision and the charged atmosphere of the midterm elections, we are again confronted with slap-happy legislation that is changing by the minute.

The bill reported by the Senate Committee on Armed Services, which I supported, was the product of a thorough process, a deliberative process. Unfortunately, this bill’s progress was halted by the administration’s objections, and the product suffered mightily. Then, in closed-door negotiations with the White House, many of the successes announced less than a week ago in the previous version were stripped.

When the administration met stiff opposition on the Hill, by former JAG—judge advocate general—officers and previous members of its own Cabinet, it realized it must come back to the table. Last Friday’s version of the bill was superseded by Monday’s version, and changes are still forthcoming. In such a frenzied, frenetic, and uncertain state, who really knows the nature of the beast? This bill could very well be the most important piece of legislation—certainly one of the most important pieces of legislation this Congress enacts, and the adoption of my amendment, which I shall offer, ensures—a reasonable review of the law authorizing military tribunals.

There is nothing more important to scrutinize than the process of bringing suspected terrorists to justice for their crimes in a fair proceeding, without the taint—without the taint—of a kangaroo court. Those are the values of our country. We dare not handle the matter sloppily, the Supreme Court has once struck down the President’s approach to military commissions, has it not? Do we want the product of this debate subjected to the same fate? Do we want it stricken also?

The original authorization of the PATRIOT Act is a case study of the risks we run in legislating from the hip—too much haste—and how, in our haste, we cannot construe the laws we hold most dear. Apparently, the Senate has not recognized the error of its ways. This legislation is complex. This legislation defines the processes and the procedures for bringing enemy combatants to trial for offenses against our country, and it involves our obligations under the Geneva Conventions. This bill defines rules of evidence, it determines defendants’ access to secret evidence, and it seeks to clarify what exactly is the remedy of reason. We cannot afford to get this wrong.

As with the PATRIOT Act, my amendment offers us an opportunity to provide a remedy for the unanticipated consequences that may arise as a result of this hasty legislative action. Along with the sweeping changes made by the PATRIOT Act, the great hope included in it was the review that was required by the sunset provision. Everyone knows the saying that hindsight is 20–20, but the nature of this type of congressional review gives us the opportunity both to strengthen the parts of the law that may be found to be weak, and to right the wrongs of past transgressions.

So if we will not today legislate in a climate of steady deliberation, then let us at least prescribe for ourselves an antidote for any self-inflicted wounds. Let us prescribe for ourselves the remedy of reason—the remedy of reason. Let this be the age of reason once more. Sunset provisions have historically been used to repair the unforeseen consequences of action in haste. You have heard that haste makes waste. If ever there was a time that legislation that cries out to be reviewed with the benefit of hindsight, it is the current bill.

My amendment, which I hold in my hand, provides the use of this authority through a 5-year sunset provision. Now, what is wrong with that? There is nothing wrong with that—a 5-year sunset provision. And I thank Senator OBAMA and I thank Senator CLINTON for their cosponsorship of my amendment. I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. President, I send my amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], for himself and Mr. OBAMA, and Mrs. CLINTON, proposes an amendment numbered S10385:

On page 5, line 19, add at the end the following: “The authority of the President to establish new military commissions under this section shall expire on December 31, 2011. However, the expiration of that authority shall not be construed to prohibit the enactment at the conclusion of the proceedings of a military commission established under this section before that date.”
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, we are about to receive a copy of the amendment. But I listened very carefully to my colleague from Virginia, who I think was just speaking. As he well knows, in my relatively short 28 years in the Senate, I have listened to him and I have the highest respect for his judgment, and particularly as it relates to how the legislative branch should discharge its constitutional responsibilities and how, also, it should not try to discharge its constitutional responsibilities. And I guess my opposition falls, most respectfully, in the latter category because I find this Congress has a very high degree of vigilance in overseeing the exercise of the executive powers as it relates to the war against those whom I view as jihadists, those who have no respect for, indeed, the religion which they have ostensibly committed their lives to, and we have no respect for, indeed, their human life. It is a most unusual period in the history of our great Republic. The good Senator, having been a part of this Chamber for nearly a half century, has seen history unfold. The Senator and I have often discussed the World War II period. That is when my grasp of history began to come into focus. And, indeed, the Senator himself was engaged in his activities in the war effort as we all were in this Nation.

The ensuing conflicts, while they have been not exactly like World War II, have been basically engaging those individuals acting in what we refer to as their adhering to a state, an existing government that has promulgated rules and regulations, such as they may be, for the orders issued to their troops, most of whom wore uniforms, certainly to a large degree in the war that followed right after World War II, the legacy of those individuals in that conflict had some vestige of a uniform, conducting their warfare under state-sponsored regulations. I had a minor part in that conflict and remember it quite well.

Vietnam came along, and there we saw the beginning of the blurring of state-sponsored. Nevertheless, it was present. The uniforms certainly lacked the clarity that had been in previous conflicts. And on the history goes.

But I do differ. I say to my good friend, the Senator from West Virginia. And I think our President, given his duty as Commander in Chief under the Constitution, has to be open to the maximum flexibility as to how he deals with these situations. We see that in a variety of issues around here. But, nevertheless, it is the exercise of executive authority, and that exercise of executive authority must also be subject to the oversight of the Congress of the United States

But the broad powers conferred on the executive branch to carry out its duty to defend the Nation in the ongoing threat against what we generally refer to as terrorism—but more specifically the militant jihadists—we have to fight with every single tool we have at our disposal, consistent with the law of this Nation and international law. And, therefore, we are here in this particular time addressing the mission of meting out justice, a measure of justice, to certain individuals who have been apprehended in the course of the war against this militant jihadist terrorist group.

I find it remarkable, as I have worked it through with my other colleagues, that they are alien, they are unlawful by all international standards in the manner they conduct the war. Yet this great Nation, from the passage of this bill, is going to mete out a measure of justice as we understand it.

Now, the Senator's concern is—and it always should be; it goes back to the time of George Washington and the Congress at that time—the fear of the overstepping of the powers of the executive branch. But I think to put a clause and restriction, such as the Senator recommends in his amendment, into this bill would, in a sense, inhibit the ability of the President to rapidly exercise all the tools at his disposal. I say to the Senator, your bill says:

"The authority of the President to establish new military commissions under this section shall expire. . . . However, the expiration of that authority shall not be construed to prohibit the conduct to finality of any proceedings of a military commission established under this section before that date."

That could be misconstrued. This war we are engaged in, not only on the fronts of Afghanistan and Iraq today, but the war which we are engaged in, most notably on the fronts of Afghanistan and Iraq today, we see where it could spread across our globe and has—not to the degree of the significance of Iraq or Afghanistan, but it has spread. Other nations have become involved in its particulars that the threats, subject to the overt actions such as took place in Spain and other places of the world. We should not have overhanging this important bill any such restriction as you wish to impose on it. We should not have overhanging this important bill any such restriction as you wish to impose by virtue of what we commonly call a sunset. I think that would not be correct. It could send the wrong message. We have to rely upon the integrity of the two branches of the Congress to be ever watchful in their oversight, ever unrestrained in the authority they have been given. As we commonly say around here, what the Congress does one day, it can undo the next day.

If, in the course of exercising our authority under the doctrine of the separation of powers—how many times have I heard the distinguished Senator from West Virginia discuss the doctrine of the separation of powers? So often. I remember when we were vigilantly trying to protect those powers reserved unto the Congress from an encroachment by the executive branch. So for that reason I most respectfully say that I do not and I urge other colleagues not to support this amendment but to continue in their trust in this institution, in the Senate and in the House, to exercise their constitutional responsibilities in such a way that we will not let the executive branch at any time transcend what we believe are certain parameters which I have set forth for this bill regarding the trials and the conduct of interrogations.

I think an extraordinary legislation that I was privileged to be involved in, which garnered 90-some votes, was the Detainee Act, sponsored by our distinguished colleague, Mr. MCCAIN. That was landmark legislation. From that legislation has come now what we call the Army Field Manual, in which we published to the world what America will do in connection with those persons—the unlawful aliens who come into our custody by virtue of our military operations, and how they will be dealt with in the course of interrogation. That was an extraordinary assertion by the Congress, within the parameters of its powers, of what it should do, the executive branch.

But a sunset date for the authority to hold military commissions, in my judgment, is not in the best interests, at this time in this war, of our country. And I see, there are other speakers. How much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Nineteen minutes 20 seconds.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I thank the Chair, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senator knows my great respect for him. He is an abiding respect. When I look at him, I see a man—a Member of this Senate—who has had vast experience and worn many coats of honor. I see a man who stands by his word, who keeps his word, and is always very meticulous in criticizing another Senator or criticizing legislation. He is most circumspect, most respectful to his colleagues, and most respectful to the Constitution. But I am abhorrent—I cannot write very well anymore. I would like to be able to write down words that other Senators believe. But I cannot write. So I may have misinterpreted, or I may misstate the words. But I cannot understand why this legislation would not be in the best interests of my country.

I believe the Senator said—he certainly implied strongly—that this legislation would not be in the best interests of our country. If I am wrong, I know the Senator will correct me. Let me read, though, the amendment:

On page 5, line 19, add at the end the following: "the authority of the President to establish new military commissions under this section shall expire on December 31, 2009. However, the exercised authority shall not be construed to prohibit the conduct to finality of any proceedings of a military commission established under this section before that date."

Mr. President, what is wrong with that language? How would that language not be in the interest of our country? I think we are all subject to
The world then came together—and I say the world—and that and enacted these three treaties. The United States was in the lead of putting those treaties in. Those treaties were for the purpose of ensuring that future mankind, generations, hopefully, would not experience what millions of people experienced by death and maiming—not only soldiers but civilians.

Mr. President, believed that the administration's approach to this could be interpreted by the world as somehow we were not behind those treaties. If we were to put a sunset in here after all of the deliberation and all of the work on the current bill that is before this body, it could once again raise the spec he that, well, if in fact the United States was trying to not live up to the treaties that brought on this debate in the Senate, then at the end of 5 years we go back to where we were. That could happen. We do not want to send a message that this Nation has reconciled, hopefully, this body, as we vote this afternoon, and will send a strong bipartisan message that we are reconciled behind this legislation to ensure that in the end we are going to live fully within the confines of the treaties of 1949.

Mr. BYRD. We are not dealing with the treaties of 1949. Mr. WARNER. I respectfully say that our bill does, in my judgment. Clearly, it constitutes an affirmation of the treaties. I would not want to send a message at this time that there could come a point, namely, December 31, 2011, the Senate as we have given about those treaties might expire. That is what concerns me.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am almost speechless. I listened to the words given about those treaties might expire. That is what concerns me.

My amendment does not affect, in any way, the portions of this bill that relate to the Geneva Conventions. It sunsets only the authority of the President to convene military commissions and, of course, the Senate can renew that authority. That is done in many instances here. I think it is insurance for our country and the welfare of our country and the welfare of the people who serve in the military.

I say 5 years. Do we want to make that 6 years? Do we want to make it 7 years? Fine. It will expire at that time. It simply means that the Senate and the House take a look at it again and renew it. Who takes this sunset away? Mr. WARNER. I say to my friend, Mr. President, from a technical standpoint, he is correct. He is going in there and incising out regarding commissions. But the whole debate has been focused around how we will conduct ourselves in accordance with the common understanding of Article 3, particularly.

So while the Senator, in his very fine and precise way of dealing with the legislation, takes out just that, it might not be fully understood beyond our shores. The headline could go out that there is going to be an expiration.

I say to my good friend, it is just not wise to go in and try and put any imprint on this that expiration could occur. It could raise, again, the debate, and I do not think that is in the interest of the country. I think this debate, this legislation has been settled, and I think it was ever the President's intention in the course of the preparation of his legislation, but some fear it could.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, it could be a Democratic President, as far as I am concerned. I think the part of the Senate in conducting its constitutional oversight, to say that we will do this far and then we will take another look at it in the light of the new day, in the light of the new times, the new circumstances; we will take another look at it. We are not passing any judgment on that legislation 5 years out.

I am flabbergasted—flabbergasted—that my friend would take umbrage at this legislation.

I only have a few minutes left.

Mr. LEVIN. Will the Senator from West Virginia yield for 3 minutes?

Mr. BYRD. Yes, I yield 3 minutes.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from West Virginia is, more than any other person in the history of this body, the custodian in his person of the Constitution of the United States. The bill that is before us obviously raises a number of very significant issues involving our Constitution.

What the amendment of Senator BYRD does very wisely is say that after 5 years, let us double back and doublecheck—double back and doublecheck—so that we can be confident that what we have done comports with the Constitution of the United States. This amendment does it very carefully. It does not disturb any pending proceeding under the commission. The Senator from West Virginia has written this amendment so carefully that he says even though it will sunset, forcing us to go back and doublecheck, to look at our work, that it will not in any way disturb any existing or pending proceeding.

I believe this is such an important statement of our determination that we act in a way that is constitutional, not in the heat of a moment which is obviously critical to us, but that we comport in every way with this Constitution. We ought to heed the words of Senator BYRD, who understands the importance of this Constitution and that this body be the guardian of the Constitution. We are the body that must protect this Constitution.

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. LEVIN. And this, as he puts it, is an insurance policy that we will do just that.

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. LEVIN. I ask unanimous consent that I be added as a cosponsor to the Byrd amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have 4 minutes remaining; do I?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 5 minutes 14 seconds remaining.

Mr. BYRD. I yield 5 minutes to my friend, the distinguished Senator from Illinois, Mr. OBAMA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. OBAMA. Mr. President, I thank my dear friend and colleague from West Virginia.

I am proud to be sponsoring this amendment with the senior Senator from West Virginia. He is absolutely right that Congress has abrogated its oversight responsibilities, and one way to reverse that troubling trend is to adopt a sunset provision in this bill.

We did it in the PATRIOT Act, and that allowed us to make important revisions to the bill that reflected our experience about what worked and what didn’t work.

And for the next 5 years, we should do that again with this important piece of legislation.

It is important to note that this is not a conventional war we are fighting, as has been noted oftentimes by our President and on the other side of the aisle. We don’t know when this war against terrorism might end. There is no emperor to sign a surrender document. As a consequence, unless we build into our own processes some mechanism to oversee what we are doing, we will be in a best case scenario, a hands-off approach, and a worst case scenario, an open-ended situation, not just for this particular President but for every President for the foreseeable future.

And we will not have any formal mechanism to require us to take a look and to make sure it is being done right.

This amendment would make a significant improvement to the existing legislation, and it is one of those amendments that would, in normal circumstances, I believe, garner strong bipartisan support. Unfortunately, we are not in normal circumstances.

Let me take a few minutes to speak more broadly about the bill before us. I may have only been in this body for a short while, but I am not naive to the political considerations that go along with many of the decisions we make here. I realize that soon—perhaps today, perhaps tomorrow—we will adjourn for the fall. The campaigning will begin in earnest. There are going to be attack ads and negative mail pieces criticizing people who don’t vote for this legislation as caring more about the rights of terrorists than the protection of Americans. And I know that this vote was specifically designed and timed to add more fuel to the fire.

Yet, while I know all of this, I am still disappointed because what we are doing here today, a debate over the fundamental human rights of the accused, should be bigger than politics. This is serious and this is somber, as the President noted today and was insisting that this is supposed to be our primary concern.

I have the utmost respect for my colleague from Virginia. It saddens me to stand and not be foursquare with him. I don’t know a more patriotic individual or anybody I admire more. When the Armed Services bill that was originally conceived came out, I thought to myself: This is a proud moment in the Senate. I thought: Here is a bipartisan piece of legislation structured and well thought through that we can all join together and support to make sure we are taking care of business.

The fact is, although the debate we have been having on this floor has obviated some ideology, some ideological differences, the truth is we could have settled most of these issues on habeas corpus, on this sunset provision, on a whole host of issues. The Armed Services Committee showed us how to do it.

All of us, Democrats and Republicans, want to do whatever it takes to track down terrorists and bring them to justice as swiftly as possible. All of us want to give our President every tool possible, and all of us were willing to do that in this bill. Anyone who says otherwise is lying to the American people.

In the 5 years the President’s system of military tribunals has existed, the fact is not one terrorist has been tried, not one has been convicted, and in the end, the Supreme Court of the United States found the whole thing unconstitutional because we were rushing through a process and not overseeing it with sufficient care. Which is why we are here today.

We could have fixed all these several years ago in a way that allows us to detain and interrogate and try suspected terrorists while still protecting the accidentally accused from spending their lives locked away in Guantanamo Bay. Easily. This was not an either-or question. We could do that still.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator’s time has expired.

Mr. WARRIOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for 2 more minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WARRIOR. Mr. President, charged against the allocation under the proponent of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proponent has no time remaining.

Mr. WARNER. We are under fairly rigid time control, but I will give the Senator from Illinois a minute.

Mr. OBAMA. I will conclude, then. I appreciate the Senator from Virginia. I appreciate the Senator from Illinois—my dear friend and colleague from Illinois—who plot terror against the United States found the whole thing unconstitutional, the American people.

And instead of not just suspending, but eliminating, the right of habeas corpus—the seven-century-old right of individuals to challenge the terms of their own detention, we could have given the accused one chance—one single chance—to ask the Government what they are being held and what they are being charged with.

But politics won today. Politics won. The administration got its vote, and now it will have its victory lap, and now they will be able to go out on the campaign trail and tell the American people that they were the ones who were tough on the terrorists.

And yet, we have a bill that gives the terrorist mastermind of 9/11 his day in court, but not the innocent people we may have accidentally rounded up and mistaken for terrorists—people who may stay in prison for the rest of their lives.

And yet, we have al-Qaeda and the Taliban regrouping in Afghanistan while we look the other way. We have a war in Iraq that our own Government’s intelligence says is serving as a recruiting tool. And we have recommendations from the bipartisan 9/11 commission that we still refuse to implement 5 years after the fact.

This problem with this bill is not that it is too tough on terrorists. The problem with this bill is that it is sloppy. And the reason it is sloppy is because we rushed it to serve political purposes instead of taking the time to do the job right.

I have heard, for example, the argument that it should be military courts, and not Federal judges, who should make decisions on these detainees. I actually agree with that.

The problem is that the structure of the military proceedings has been poorly thought through. Indeed, the regulations that are supposed to be governing administrative hearings for these detainees, which should have been issued months ago, still haven’t been issued. Indeed, we have rushed this bill or any President—to decide what does and does not constitute torture, we could have left the definition up to our own laws and to the Geneva Conventions, as we would have if we passed the bill that the Armed Services Committee originally proposed.

Instead of detainees arriving at Guantanamo and facing a Combatant Status Review Tribunal that allows them no real chance to prove their innocence with evidence or a lawyer, we could have developed a real military system of justice that would sort out the suspected terrorists from the accidentally accused.

And instead of not just suspending, but eliminating, the right of habeas corpus—the seven-century-old right of individuals to challenge the terms of their own detention, we could have given the accused one chance—one single chance—to ask the Government what they are being held and what they are being charged with. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator’s time has expired.

Mr. WARRIOR. We are under fairly rigid time control, but I will give the Senator from Illinois a minute.

But politics won today. Politics won. The administration got its vote, and now it will have its victory lap, and now they will be able to go out on the campaign trail and tell the American people that they were the ones who were tough on the terrorists.

And yet, we have a bill that gives the terrorist mastermind of 9/11 his day in court, but not the innocent people we may have accidentally rounded up and mistaken for terrorists—people who may stay in prison for the rest of their lives.

And yet, we have a report authored by sixteen of our own Government’s intelligence agencies, a previous draft of which described, and I quote, ‘‘... actions by the United States government that were determined to have stoked the jihad movement, like the indefinite detention of prisoners at Guantanamo Bay.’’

And yet, we have al-Qaeda and the Taliban regrouping in Afghanistan while we look the other way. We have a war in Iraq that our own Government’s intelligence says is serving as a recruiting tool. And we have recommendations from the bipartisan 9/11 commission that we still refuse to implement 5 years after the fact.

This problem with this bill is not that it is too tough on terrorists. The problem with this bill is that it is sloppy. And the reason it is sloppy is because we rushed it to serve political purposes instead of taking the time to do the job right.

I have heard, for example, the argument that it should be military courts, and not Federal judges, who should make decisions on these detainees. I actually agree with that.

The problem is that the structure of the military proceedings has been poorly thought through. Indeed, the regulations that are supposed to be governing administrative hearings for these detainees, which should have been issued months ago, still haven’t been issued. Indeed, we have rushed this bill or any President—to decide what does and does not constitute torture, we could have left the definition up to our own laws and to the Geneva Conventions, as we would have if we passed the bill that the Armed Services Committee originally proposed.

Instead of detainees arriving at Guantanamo and facing a Combatant Status Review Tribunal that allows them no real chance to prove their innocence with evidence or a lawyer, we could have developed a real military system of justice that would sort out the suspected terrorists from the accidentally accused.
I conclude by saying this: Senator Byrd has spent more time in this Chamber than many of us combined. He has seen the ebbs and flows of politics in this Nation. He understands that sometimes we get caught up in the heat of the moment. The design of the Senate has been to cool those passions and try step back and take a sober look and a careful look at what we are doing.

Passions never flare up more than during times where we feel threatened. I strongly urge, despite my great admiration for one of the sponsors of the underlying bill, that we accept this extraordinary modest amendment that would allow us to go back in 5 years' time and make sure that we are doing serves American ideals, American values, and ultimately will make us more successful in prosecuting the war on terror about which all of us are concerned.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask the distinguished Senator from Virginia, may I have 10 seconds?

Mr. WARNER. I am going to give the Senator more than 10 seconds. I have to do a unanimous consent request on behalf of the leadership.

I ask unanimous consent that the order with respect to S. 295 be vitiated. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LEVIN. Reserving the right to object.

Mr. WARNER. I understand there is no objection. Will the Chair kindly rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I yield such time as Mr. Byrd wishes to take.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. B YRD. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Virginia. I merely wanted to thank the distinguished Senator from Illinois, Mr. Obama, for his statement. I think it was well said, I think it was wise, and I thank him for his strong support of this amendment. I also close by asking that the clerk once again read this amendment. I will then yield the floor. I thank the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I say to my good friend, I fully understand what you endeavor to do here, and I respectfully strongly disagree with it. I think many of us share this. This is going to be a very long war against those people whom we generically call terrorists. As a consequence of that war, this President and his successor must have the authority to continue to conduct these courts-martial—these trials under these commissions—and not send out a signal to terrorists: If you get caught, this thing may end.

Mr. WARNER. If you are not caught within this period of time, when this went into effect, then you are no longer going to be held accountable. I am terribly disappointed on this side of this body, regret that this Nation or other nations or a consortium of nations have not captured Osama bin Laden. There is a debate going on about that, and I am not going to get into that debate, but the fact is he is still at large. There could be other Osama bin Ladens, and it may take years to apprehend them, no matter how diligently we pursue them. We cannot send out a signal that at this definitive time, it is the responsibility of the President, of the executive, that he is accountable for crimes against humanity. They would not be held accountable if this provision went into power.

Mr. LEVIN. And the Senator from Massachusetts has how many minutes remaining on the bill. The Senator from Vermont has 12 minutes remaining on the bill. The Senate from Virginia has 9¾ minutes.

Mr. WARNER. I would like to have that time transferred under my time on the bill as a whole. I hope Senator CORNYN, who has expressed an interest in this, gets the opportunity to use that time to address this amendment.

Now, Mr. President, as I look at the number of Senators who are desiring to speak on my side—and I think perhaps it would be helpful if you could, I say to my colleague, the ranking member, check on the other side—we still have some debate, and we are prepared to get into debate on the Kennedy amendment now. Therefore, I will undertake to do that just as soon as I finish.

But then we are in that time period where all time has expired or utilized or otherwise allocated on the several amendments. We will soon receive an indication from the leadership as to the time just as soon as I finish.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I say to my good friend, I fully understand what you endeavor to do here, and I respectfully strongly disagree with it. I think many of us share this. This is going to be a very long war against those people whom we generically call terrorists. As a consequence of that war, this President and his successor must have the authority to continue to conduct these courts-martial—these trials under these commissions—and not send out a signal to terrorists: If you get caught, this thing may end.

Mr. WARNER. If you are not caught within this period of time, when this went into effect, then you are no longer going to be held accountable. I am terribly disappointed on this side of this body, regret that this Nation or other nations or a consortium of nations have not captured Osama bin Laden. There is a debate going on about that, and I am not going to get into that debate, but the fact is he is still at large. There could be other Osama bin Ladens, and it may take years to apprehend them, no matter how diligently we pursue them. We cannot send out a signal that at this definitive time, it is the responsibility of the President, of the executive, that he is accountable for crimes against humanity. They would not be held accountable if this provision went into power.
Mr. LEVIN. How much time all together on the majority side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the bill, 30 minutes; on the Kennedy amendment, 30 minutes.

Mr. LEVIN. I think everybody ought to recognize how we are in. I hope we will withhold our comments until those on the other side who have been indicated as having time allocated to them speak so that we will have some time to respond to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator from Virginia is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 5088

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I would now like to address the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Massachusetts.

I have read this very carefully and I have studied it. I say to my good friend, there are certain aspects of this amendment that are well-intentioned. But I strongly oppose it, and I do encourage colleagues to oppose it, because much of the separation of powers is involved here, and that is the subject on which this Chamber has resonated many times. But here I find the amendment invades the authority of the executive branch in the area of the conduct of our foreign affairs by requiring the Secretary of State to notify other state parties to the Geneva Conventions of certain U.S. interpretations of the Geneva Conventions, particularly Common Article 3 and the law of war.

It is up to the executive branch in its discretion to take such actions in terms of its relations with other states in this world—not the Congress directing that they must do so—such communications with foreign governments. But in the balance of powers, it is beyond the purview of the Congress to say to the Secretary of State: You shall do thus and so.

This bill speaks for itself by defining grave breaches of Common Article 3 that amount to war crimes under U.S. law. Any congressional listing of specific techniques should be avoided simply because Congress cannot foresee all of the techniques considered to maybe fall within the category of cruel and inhuman conduct, and therefore, they would become violations of Article 3. We can’t foresee all of those situations. Again, it is the responsibility of this body to administer, to see that this bill becomes law in a manner of oversight. Senator Warner’s amendment is dependent on how the vote comes—and I am of the opinion that this Chamber will reject it—I don’t want that rejection to be misconstrued by the world in any way as asserting that the techniques mentioned in the amendment are consistent with the Geneva Conventions or that they could legitimately be employed against our troops or anyone else. We must not leave that impression as a consequence of the decision soon to be made by way of a vote on the Kennedy amendment.

The types of conduct described in this amendment, in my opinion, are in the category of grave breaches of Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions. These are clearly prohibited by our bill. Rather than listing specific techniques, Congress has exercised its proper constitutional role by defining such conduct in broad terms as a crime under the War Crimes Act. The techniques in Senator Kennedy’s amendment are not consistent with the Common Article 3 and would strongly protest their use against our troops or any others.

So I say with respect to my good friend, this is not an amendment that I would in any way want to be a part of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I would like to inquire of the Senator from Virginia, and I yield myself 3 minutes. As I understand, one of the reasons this amendment is being rejected is because it is going to place on our State Department to notify the 194 countries that we expect, if these techniques are used against Americans, they would be considered a war crime. That is a possible difficulty for us? That is a burden for our government? Or, is it the objection because we can’t foresee all of the different kinds of techniques that might be used against individuals and therefore we shouldn’t list these. We list them in the Army Field Manual specifically, pulled out of the air: they are listed specifically in the Army Field Manual. That is where they come from. And a number of the Members on the other side of the aisle have said that those techniques are prohibited. So we have taken the Department of Defense list and incorporated it.

Then the last argument is that: Well, if it is rejected, we don’t want this to be interpreted as a green light for these techniques. There must be stronger arguments. Maybe I am missing something around here. With all respect, I have difficulty in understanding why the Senator from Virginia, the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, does not address the fundamental issue, which is included in this amendment, and that is this amendment protects Americans who are out on the front lines of the war on terror, the SEALs, the CIA, others who are fighting, and it gives us an integrity: You go ahead with any of these techniques and you are committing a war crime and will be held accountable.

Now, if I could get a good answer to that, I would welcome it, but I haven’t heard it yet. With all respect, I just haven’t heard why the Senator is refusing and effectively denying—opposition to this amendment is denying that kind of protection. I read, and it was when the Senator was here, when we found out that similar kinds of techniques were used against Americans in World War II, and we sentenced offenders to 10, 15 years and even executed some. Now we are saying: Oh, no, we can’t list those because it is going to be a bother to our State Department, notifying these countries. My, goodness.

There has to be a better reason that we are not going to protect our service men and women from these kinds of techniques. We are saying to those countries: If you use these techniques, you are a war criminal. What are those techniques? They are in the Department of Defense listing. That is what this amendment is about. How often do you use it? I gave the illustrations of how they were used repeatedly, whether it has been by Iran or whether it has been by Japan, or any of our adversaries in any other war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has consumed 3 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield myself 1 minute. I want to put in the RECORD the excellent letter from Jack Vessey, who is a distinguished former Joint Chief of Staff:

I continue to read and hear that we are facing a different enemy in the war on terror. No matter how true that may be, it will not be accomplished by cruel and inhuman conduct. This is not an amendment that I would like to see the Chamber take. There are certain aspects of this amendment that are well-intentioned. So I say with respect to my good friend, this is not an amendment that I would in any way want to be a part of this bill.

The Kennedy amendment does it. That is what this amendment is about. I reserve the remainder of my time.

I ask unanimous consent the letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEPTEMBER 12, 2006.

Hon. JOHN MCCAIN, U.S. Senate.

Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: Sometimes, the news is a little garbled by the time it reaches the forests of North-central Minnesota, but I call your attention to recent reports that the Congress is considering legislation which might relax the United States support for adherence to Common Article 3 of the Geneva Convention. If that is true, it would seem to weaken the effect of the McCain Amendment on torture of last year. If such legislation is being considered, I fear that it may weaken America in two respects. First, it would undermine the moral basis which has generally guided our conduct in war throughout our history. Second, it could weaken support for the treatment of Americans being held prisoner in time of war.

In 1989, 3 years after the creation of the Department of Defense, the then Secretary of Defense, General George C. Marshall, issued a small book, titled The Armed Forces Officer. A book which summarized the laws and traditions that governed our Armed Forces through the years. As the Senate deals with the issue it may consider a short quote from the last chapter of that book which General Marshall sent to every American Officer. The last chapter is titled “Americans in Combat” and it lists 29 general propositions which govern the treatment of Americans in war. Number XCV, which I long ago underlined in my copy, reads as follows:
Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the Military Commissions Act of 2006. This historic legislation is the result of much work, thought, and debate.

I commend the administration, I commend Senator MCCAIN, Senator GRAHAM, and all those who were involved in the ultimate compromise we have come to on this very sensitive and very complex issue. I am pleased we were able to find common ground on this critical issue and ensure that the President can authorize the appropriate agencies to move forward with an appropriate interrogation program.

There is no question that this program provides essential intelligence that is vital to America's success in the war on terrorism. At the same time, it honors our agreement under the Geneva Conventions and underscores to other nations that America is a nation of laws. This has been a difficult issue and both sides worked so diligently to achieve this result. In this new era of threats, where the stark and sober reality is that America must confront international terrorists committed to the destruction of our way of life, this bill is absolutely necessary. Our prior concept of war has been completely altered, as we learned so tragically on September 11, 2001. We must address threats in a different way. If we are going to be at the root of terrorist activity, we need to be able to get critical information to do so.

There has been much discussion during the course of the drafting of this bill about the rule of law, and the rule of law relative to detainees is, indeed, reflected in this bill. It provides for tribunals, for judges, for counsel, for discovery, and for rules of evidence.

Most importantly, however, in my view, is that while this bill provides important rules of law, these procedures for illegal enemy combatants, it does not give them the same protections which we afford lawful enemy combatants or our own military personnel, and that is a critical distinction. And that is how it ought to be. We have made that distinction for no other reason than to provide incentive for every nation across the world to observe international agreements for the proper treatment of captives. It bears repeating. This bill applies to the trial of illegal enemy combatants—those who make no pretense whatsoever of conformity with even minimal standards or international norms of civilized behavior when it comes to the treatment of those they capture.

We hear repeatedly that we should be concerned about what we do, for fear that we encourage others to treat our captured service men and women in a similar manner. But let's be very clear here and state what every American knows to be true. The al-Qaeda terrorists treat our captured service men and women by beheading them and by dragging their bodies through the streets.
They need no encouragement or excuse for their actions by reference to our treatment of their captives.

As a result of the Supreme Court’s ruling, we are creating military commissions that provide rule of law protections which are embodied in this bill—courts, judges, legal counsel, and rules of evidence. So this bill appropriately meets our international obligations and America’s sense of what is right and it is in keeping with our highest values.

However, this bill will allow the President to move forward with a terrorist interrogation program that will ensure that we continue to get critical information from those who are plotting to carry out hateful acts against America and against Americans. I commend the President for his determination to respond to the new reality confronting us. I commend Chairman Warriner and my colleagues on the Armed Services Committee who worked in good faith to craft a bill which is the right bill to respond to the challenges we face. And again, I am pleased we were able to find common ground on this critical issue and ensure that the President can move forward with an appropriate interrogation program.

I think it is important that we send a bill to the White House, to the desk of the President that is exactly the same as the bill that has already been passed by the House so we can put this program in place immediately. The way we do that is to continue to defeat all the amendments that have been put forward, and that we send the President the same bill that has already been passed by the House so that this program can be reinitiated immediately.

I yield the floor.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I thank our distinguished colleague from Georgia, a very valued member of the Armed Services Committee who has from time to time participated in the extensive deliberations and consultations to help the original bill which we worked on should be shaped and finally amended. I thank him.

Again, I call to the attention of colleagues that I shall put in a quorum for the purpose of trying to accommodate Members on my side who desire to speak.

I now see the distinguished Senator from South Carolina. We are prepared to allocate to him such time as he may desire. How much time does he need?

Mr. GRAHAM. Would 15 minutes be OK?

Mr. WARNER. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM. I thank the chairman. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, in 15 minutes I will try to explain the processes as I know it to be in terms of how we are working on it.

No. 1, I am glad we are here. I think the country is better off having the bill voted on in the current fashion.

I have gotten to know Senator Warriner very well over the last 30 days. I had a high opinion of the Senator before this process started, but I, quite frankly, am in awe of his ability to stand up for the institution as a U.S. Senator, who was a former Secretary of the Navy who has this balanced approach about what we are trying to do.

It is no secret that Senator McCain is one of my closest friends in this body, and I respect him in so many ways. But unlike myself and most of us, Senator McCain paid a heavy price while serving this country. He and his colleagues in Vietnam were treated very poorly as prisoners of war. When he speaks about the Geneva Conventions, he does so as someone who has been in an environment where the Conventions would not apply. But Senator McCain believes very strongly in the Geneva Conventions. When it comes to the Vietnam war, he has told me more than once that if it were his choice, the United States and the international community that constantly pushed back against the North Vietnamese, he thought the torture would have continued and all of them would eventually be killed. But the North Vietnamese became concerned about international criticism after a point in time.

While the Geneva Conventions were not applied evenly by any means, it did have an effect on the North Vietnamese.

I have been a military lawyer for over 20 years. I have had the honor of wearing the Air Force uniform while serving my country and being around great men and women in uniform. It has been one of the highlights of my life. I have never been shot at. The only people who wanted to kill me were probably some of my clients. But I do appreciate why the Geneva Conventions exist. Armed conflict is a body of law unique to itself and has a rich tradition in our country and throughout the world and it will work to make us safe and live within our values if we properly apply it.

The reason we are here is because the Supreme Court ruled in the Hamdan case that the military commissions authorized by the President were in violation of Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions. They were not regularly constituted courts.

It surprised me greatly that the Supreme Court would find that the Geneva Conventions applied to the war on terror. It was President Bush’s assumption and mine, quite frankly, that human treatment would be the standard. But this enemy doesn’t wear a uniform; it operates outside the Conventions, doesn’t represent a nation, and, therefore, would not be covered. But the Supreme Court came to a different conclusion. Thus, we are here. I know my colleagues will argue that they are in fact not uniform, but I think that will be sustained by the Court.

The confrontation rights that were originally posed by the administration gave me great concern. I do not believe that to win this war we need to create a procedure that allows us to receive evidence classified in nature, convict the accused, and the accused never knows what the jury had to render a
That was the proposal which I thought went too far and that would come back to haunt us. As a result of this compromise, it has been taken out.

We have a national security privilege available to the Government to protect that prosecutor’s file from being given over to the defense or to the accused so our soldiers can be protected. We will now allow the prosecutor to give that to the jury and let them bring it out on the side of the accused and the accused never knowing what he was convicted upon. That could come back to haunt us if one of our soldiers falls into enemy hands.

We would not want a future conviction based on evidence that our soldiers and CIA operative never saw. I think we have a military commission model that affords due process under the law of war. If one of our soldiers is stained, it will be something we can be proud of, that will work in a way to render justice, and if a condition is abstained, it will be something we can be proud of as a nation. I am hopeful that the world would see the condition based not venegemement.

My goal is to render justice to the terrorists, even though they will not render justice to us. That is a big distinction.

People ask me, Why do you care about the Geneva Conventions? These people will cut our heads off and they will kill us all. You are absolutely right. Why do I care?

Because I am an American. And we have led the way for over 50-something years when it comes to the Geneva Conventions applications. I am also a military lawyer, and I can tell every Member of this body—some of them have served in combat unlike myself; some know better than I. But former F-16, F-22, F-111 pilots in Somalia. A helicopter pilot was captured by militia in Somalia. We dropped leaflets all over the city of Mogadishu. We told the militia leaders, “If you harm a helicopter pilot, you will be a war criminal.” We blared that throughout town on loudspeakers with helicopters. After a period of time, they got the message, and he was released.

We had two pilots shot down over Libya when Reagan bombed Qadhafi. I was an active duty in the Air Force. We told Qadhafi directly and indirectly, if they harm these two pilots, they will be in violation of the Geneva Conventions, and we will hunt you down to the ends of the Earth.

I want to be able to say in future wars that there is no reason to abandon our Geneva Conventions obligations to render justice to these terrorists.

So not only do we have a military commission model that is Geneva Conventions compliant; we have a model that I think we should be proud of as a nation.

The idea that the changes between the committee bill and the compromise represents some grave departure, quite frankly, I vehemently disagree with. I didn’t get into this discussion and political fight to take all the heat that we have taken to turn around and do something that undercuts the purpose of being involved in it to begin with.

The evidentiary standard that will be used in a military commission trial of an enemy combatant was adopted from the International Criminal Court.

I will place into the RECORD statements from every Judge Advocate General in the services that have certified from their point of view that the evidentiary standard that the judge will apply to any statements coming into evidence against an enemy combatant are legally sufficient, will not harm our standing in the world, and, in fact, are the model of the International Criminal Court which try the war criminals on a routine basis.

The provision I added, along with Senator MCCAIN, dealing with the provisions of the Detainee Treatment Act, 5th, 8th, and 14th amendment concepts within the Detainee Treatment Act, will also be a standard in the future designed to reinforce the relevance of the Geneva Conventions in our national policy, in our legal system, not to undermine anything but to enforce the concept the Detainee Treatment Act and the judicial standard that our military judges will apply to the terrorists accused of committing torture.

The provision I added, dealing with the Detainee Treatment Act, 5th, 8th, and 14th amendment concepts within the Detainee Treatment Act, will also be a standard in the future designed to reinforce the relevance of the Geneva Conventions in our national policy, in our legal system, not to undermine anything but to enforce the concept the Detainee Treatment Act and the judicial standard that our military judges will apply to the terrorists accused of committing torture.

We have been a member of the JAG court for 20 years. I have had the honor of serving with many men and women who will be in that court-martial scene. The chief prosecutor, Mr. Davis, I met for a captain. There is no finer officer in the military than Colonel Davis. He is committed to render justice. I am very proud of the fact that the men and women who will be doing these military commissions believe in the Geneva Conventions just as much as anybody I have ever met, and they want to render justice.

What else do we try to accomplish?

We reauthorize the military commissions in a way to be Geneva Conventions-compliant to afford the defendants accused due process in the way that will not come back to haunt us.

What else did we have to deal with? A CIA program that is classified in nature. There is a debate in this country: Should we have a CIA interrogation program classified in nature that would allow techniques not in the Army Field Manual to get good intelligence from high value targets? The answer, from my point of view, is yes, we should, but not because we want to torture anybody, because we want to be humane as a nation. The reason we need a CIA program classified in nature to get good information is because in this war information is saved. Without that out, there is no good intelligence. But you have to do it with your value system.

Abu Ghraib was an aberration, but it hurt this country. If the world believes America has adopted techniques and tactics that are not of who we are, we lose our standing. So what we did regarding the CIA, we redefined the War Crimes Act to meet our Geneva Conventions obligations. The test for the Congress was, how can you have a clandestine CIA program and then not run afoul of the Geneva Conventions? What are the Geneva Conventions requirements of every country? That is what we are talking about.

We added three other crimes we came up with ourselves.

Torture has always been a crime, so anyone who comes to the Senate and says the United States engages in torture, concedes torture, that this agreement somehow legitimizes torture, you don’t know what you are talking about. Torture is a crime in America. If someone is engaged in it, they are subject to being a felon, subject to the penalty of death. Not only is torture a war crime, it is a crime. It is a physical injury, cruel and inhumane treatment mentally and physically of a detainee is a war crime under title 18 of the war crimes statute.

Every CIA agent, every military member now has the guidance they need to understand the law. Before we got involved, our title 18 War Crimes Act was hopelessly confusing. I couldn’t understand it. We brought clarity. We have reined in the program. We have created APT to do what we can do. We can aggressively interrogate, but we will not run afoul of the Geneva Conventions. We are not going to let our people commit felonies in the name of getting good information, but now they know what they can and cannot do.

Who complies with that treaty? Who is it within our Government who would implement our obligations under the treaty? The Congress has decided what the war crime would be to prohibit grave breaches of the treaty. The President, this President, like every other President, implements treaties. So what we said in this legislation, when it comes to nongrave breaches, all the other obligations of the Geneva Conventions, the President will have the responsibility constitutionally to comply with those obligations, not to rewrite title 18, not to sanction torture, not to violate the Detainee Treatment Act, but to fulfill the treaty the way every other President has in our constitutional history. That is all we have done. To say otherwise is just political rhetoric. Not only have we allowed the CIA to use the war as an excuse to torture and not to violate the Geneva Conventions, we have delegated to the President what was already our constitutional responsibility to enforce the treaty—not to rewrite it but to enforce it and fulfill it.

My concern was that in the process of complying with Hamdan, we would be seen by the world as redefining the treaty for our own purposes. We have not redefined the Geneva Conventions. We have, for the first time in our domestic law, clearly defined what a crime would be against the Geneva Conventions, and we have told the President, as a Congress: It is your job to fulfill the other obligations outside of criminal law. That is the way it should be, and I am proud of something of which I am extremely proud.

We have been at war for over 5 years. Here we are 5 years later trying to figure out the basic legal infrastructure. It has been confusing. It has been contentious. We have had two Supreme Court cases where the Government’s work product was struck down.

My hope is that our homework will be graded by the Supreme Court, that this bill eventually will go to our Federal courts, as it should, and the courts will say the following: the military commissions are Geneva Conventions compliant and meet constitutional standards set out by our country when it comes to trying people.

I am confident the court will rule that way. I am confident the Supreme Court will understand that the power the President gave to the President to fulfill the treaty is consistent with his role as President and the war crimes we have written to protect the treaty from a grave breach from our own people is written in a way to sustain legal scrutiny.

I am also confident that Congress has finally cleared up what has been a huge problem. What role should a judge have in a time of war? Who should make the decision regarding enemy combatant status?

In every war we have been in up until now, the military has decided the battlefield issues. Under the Geneva Conventions, it is a military decision to consider who an enemy combatant is. The habeas cases that have existed in our courts from the last 3 or 4 years have led to tremendous chaos at Guantanamo Bay. Troops are not protected by the people we are fighting. They are bringing every kind of action you can think of into Federal courts.

Over 200 cases have been filed. It is impeding the war effort.

A judge should not make a military decision during a time of war. The military is far more capable of determining who an enemy combatant is than a Federal judge. They are not trained to do that.

We have replaced a system where the judges of this country can take over military decisions and allow judges to review military decisions, once made, for legal sufficiency. That is the way the Geneva Conventions are supposed to operate. Nobody does it. Habeas has no place in this war for enemy prisoners. The Germans and the Japanese—no prisoner in the history of the United States has ever been able to go to a Federal court and sue the people they are fighting who are protecting us against the enemy.

We are allowing the Federal courts to review every military decision made about an enemy combatant as to whether they made the right decision and whether the procedures they used are constitutional. We have rejected the idea as a Congress of allowing the courts to run the war when it comes to defining who an enemy combatant is. That is not a decision which needed to be made. It is not destroying the writ of habeas corpus. It is having a rational, balanced approach to where the judges can play a meaningful role in time of war and not play a role they are not equipped to play. This will mean nothing if it does not withstand court scrutiny.

I hope soon we will have an overwhelming vote for the final product after the amendments are disposed of. My goal for 2 years has been to try to find national unity, to have the Congress, the executive branch, and eventually the courts on the same sheet of music where we can tell the world at large that we have detention policies, constitution al and in line with the Geneva Convention policies that not only are humane and just but will allow us to protect ourselves from a vicious enemy and live up to our obligations as a nation. We are very close to that day coming.

I thank every Member of this Senate who has worked to make this product better. When you cast a vote, please remember, we are at war, we are not fighting crime.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, we now have an additional speaker, the Senator from Texas.

As the Senator from South Carolina has just completed his remarks, I have to say it has been an unusual experience for all of us these last few weeks. Working together with Senator MCCAIN and the Senator from South Carolina has enabled this Senate to proceed in a way that is consistent with Senate practice. We go through a bill, have a markup, and then proceed to work on a product. It brought together the consensus.

I say to my friend from South Carolina, although I have had some modest experience as Secretary of the Navy dealing with court-martials, and, indeed, when I was a young officer in the Marines, I was involved in court-martials, the Senate brought together in the deliberation, in the debate, the very special expertise of the years he has had.

Now he is a full colonel in the U.S. Air Force and a Judge Advocate General recognition. I thank the Senator for his invaluable contribution to this deliberative process in the Senate.

Now I yield the floor to our last speaker before we proceed to the votes. As I understand, we will be voting at the conclusion of this statement?

Mr. LEVIN. I don’t know if the unanimous consent agreement has been finished yet. That is our hope.

Mr. WARNER. We are finishing a unanimous consent request, but I alert the Senate that it is my strong hope and prediction we will soon be voting in sequence on three amendments.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, I first compliment the distinguished chairman of the Senate Committee on Armed Services, the Senator from Virginia, for being the calm and steady hand on the rudder during the course of the discussions and debates involving the important piece of legislation. His work and demeanor have always been constructive and civil, and any disagreements we have had are bethinking of the great traditions of this institution. I thank him for that.

Mr. WARNER. If I may, I thank the Senator from Texas. Several times we came to the Senator’s office in the course of the deliberations on this bill because the Senator, too, brings to the debate a vast experience, having risen through the ranks of the legal profession to become a judge in his State. The Senator is very well equipped and did provide a very valuable input into this debate.

Mr. CORNYN. My thanks to the Senator from Virginia—nothing could be further from the truth. In fact, what this bill does is make sure that the provisions of the Detainee Treatment Act, which were passed in December of 2005 in this same Senate, that ban torture, cruel, inhuman, and degrading treatment of detainees, that we comply with those laws which reflect upon our international treaty obligations as well as our domestic laws and which reflect our American values.

We are a nation at war. But there is no equivalency with the way this war is fought and prosecuted by the United States and our allies, no equivalency with the manner in which the war is prosecuted by our enemies. We have learned that our enemies have been at war against us for much longer than just September 11, 2001, and date back many years before we even realized America was under attack.

We know that this enemy, represented by Islamic extremism, justifies the use of murder against innocent civilians in order to accomplish its goals. America complies with all of its international treaty obligations and domestic laws. What this bill is about is to try to provide our intelligence authorities the clear direction they need so they know how to comply with those laws and, at the same time, preserve an absolute means of collecting intelligence through the interrogation of high-value detainees at Guantanamo Bay.

But no civilian employee of the U.S. Government, worker at the CIA, or elsewhere is going to risk their career, their reputation, and their assets using some sort of cloudy law or gray law that does not make clear what is permitted and what is not permitted. This bill we are prepared to pass in a few minutes provides that kind of clear direction. What it says is that we in the U.S. Congress are stepping up to take the responsibility ourselves to provide that kind of clarity that will allow our intelligence authorities to gain this important intelligence while at the same time be secure in the knowledge that they are doing fully complies with our law, including our international treaty obligations.

We know the aggressive interrogation techniques that are legal under the provisions of the McCain amendment in the Detainee Treatment Act have provided much valuable intelligence that has saved American lives. We know the CIA’s high-value terrorist detainee program works. For example, detainees have provided the names of approximately 86 individuals whom Al-Qaida deemed suitable for Western operations. Half of these individuals have now been removed from the battlefield and are no longer a threat to the United States of America or our allies.

This program is effective and has saved American lives and must be preserved. Yet there are people who would go so far as to intitate that we are torturing people. But we are not torturing people. But we are using legal, aggressive interrogations consistent with the U.S. Constitution, U.S. laws, and our treaty obligations. In doing so, we are keeping faith with the American people that the Federal Government will use every legal means available to us to keep the American people safe.

Now, we may disagree—and we do disagree on the Senate floor—with the level of rights that an accused terrorist should have. I happen to believe that we would all agree that the CIA interrogation program must continue. We must not allow the brave patriots who conduct these interrogations to be at risk unnecessarily by providing a gray zone as opposed to absolute clarity insofar as it is within our power to give it so that we may interrogate these captured terrorists to the fullest extent of the law. To do so, we are somehow torturing individuals or violating our own laws that we passed just last year in the Detainee Treatment Act under the McCain amendment banning torture, cruel and inhuman treatment, is absolutely untrue and irresponsible. The American people have a right to believe we will use every legal tool available to us to help keep them safe against this new and different type of enemy.

Let me just say a word about who that enemy is. We have heard we are engaged in a global war on terror, and that is absolutely true. But it does not necessarily tell us who that enemy is. Unfortunately, it is an enemy that has hijacked one of the world’s great religions, Islam, in pursuit of their extremist goals that justifies the murder of innocent civilians in order to accomplish those goals.

Some on the Senate floor have said this debate is all about Iraq. It is not just about Iraq. If it were just about Iraq, how would those critics explain the attempted terrorist plot that was broken up at Heathrow Airport just a few short weeks ago, or the attacks in Madrid or Beslan in Russia or Bali or elsewhere or, for that matter, New York and Washington, DC?

The fact is, we have prevented another terrorist attack on our own soil by using this interrogation program to allow us to detect and deter and disrupt terrorist activity, and the fact we have also taken the fight on the offensive where the terrorists plot, plan, train, and try to export their terrorist attacks to the United States and elsewhere.

If we would do what some would apparently want us to do and simply pull the covers over our head and wish the bad people away, we would be less safe and we would not be able to stand here and say that due to the vigilance of the American people, due to the vigilance of the U.S. Congress and the executive branch of Government, we have been successful, thank goodness, in preventing another terrorist attack on our own soil, after 5 years from September 11, 2001.

So, Mr. President, I hope our colleagues will vote against these ill-advised amendments to this bill and will send a clean bill to be reconciled with the House version and sent to the President right away so that before too long we can see that some of the war criminals who sit detained at Guantanamo Bay may be brought to justice, people like Khalid Shaikh Mohammed, who was the mastermind of the 9/11 plot that killed nearly 3,000 Americans. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAFEE). The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague from Texas. He has been a valuable addition to those who are trying to structure this piece of legislation.

Momentarily, I will seek a unanimous consent request ordering the votes and the allocation of such time as remains between Senators.

So at this point in time, I will suggest the absence of a quorum, unless the Senator from Massachusetts would like to take the additional 3 minutes that he has at this time on his amendment.

MR. KENNEDY. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, just quickly, the proceedings we are going to have—if I can inquire—I use the 3 minutes, and then we are moving toward a series of votes; is that right?

Mr. WARNER. That is correct. I say to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. Kennedy. Then, I would ask when I have 30 seconds left—Mr. President, I have 3½ minutes; am I correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Three minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Three minutes.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I may have misunderstood my colleague. That is the 3 minutes remaining on your amendment held in abeyance.

Mr. KENNEDY. That is correct.

Mr. President, I yield myself the 3 minutes.

AMENDMENT NO. 5088

Mr. President, just for the benefit of the membership, in my hand is the Army manual. In the Army manual are the prohibitions for instructions to all the interrogators of the United States, that they cannot use these kinds of harsh tactics which have been recognized by Members as torture.

This amendment says if any country is going to use these similar tactics against those who would be representing the United States in the war on terror—for example, the Central Intelligence Agency; for example, the SEALs; for example, contractors working for the Intelligence Agency—then they will have committed a war crime.

I reviewed earlier in the debate where we have prosecuted Japanese and other war crimes, giving them 10 or 15 years, and even execution when they went ahead with this. That is why this is so important.

Now, my good friend, the chairman of the committee, says we cannot do it. because it violates the Constitution because it is instructing—the President of the United States through the State Department to notify the 194 countries.

Well, we thought it was not unconstitutional on the Port Security Act, when we said:

When the Secretary, . . . after conducting an assessment . . . decides that an airport does not maintain and carry out effective security, the Secretary shall notify the appropriate authorities of the government of the foreign country. . . .

Here is port security.

Here is on the pollution issues:

The State shall notify without delay foreign states concerned . . .

That is the second one.

And I have the third illustration in terms of foreign carriers.

In 15 minutes we got these cases. And here we are going to say we are going to refuse to protect Americans who are on the cutting edge of the war on terror because we will not let our State Department go on an e-mail and notify the 192 countries because that is unconstitutional. The chairman of the Armed Services Committee feels that way, we could strike that provision and just say it is the policy of the United States. Then we would not be instructing anyone. Either way, this is about protecting Americans. It is about protecting Americans.

I believe those Americans who are out there in the hills and in the mountains of Afghanistan today and tonight, those people who are in the hills and mountains and deserts of Iraq, those people who are out in Southeast Asia or all over the world in order to try to deal with the problems of terrorism ought to know, if they are in danger of getting captured, if any of their host countries are going to perform some kind of procedure and torture on them, they will be war criminals.

That is what this amendment is about. I hope it will be accepted. It should be.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I yield what time I have to my ranking member.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator’s time has expired.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, at this time we are waiting for clearance by the leadership of the UC. But I will ask at this time we get the yeas and nays on all the votes, the amendments and final passage.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, without objection, does any unanimous consent request allow me to close on my amendment for 2 minutes?

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, the UC, as presently drafted, gives 2 minutes to each side for the purpose of addressing amendments.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I once again restate the request for the yeas and nays on the amendments and final passage. An unanimous consent that it be in order to ask for the yeas and nays on the amendments and final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendments and final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that any remaining time be yielded back, other than as noted below, a majority of the Senate proceed to votes in relation to the amendments in the following order:

The Rockefeller amendment No. 5095, the Byrd amendment No. 5104, and the Kennedy amendment No. 5088.

I further ask unanimous consent that there be 5 minutes for debate, equally divided, prior to each of the above votes.

I further ask unanimous consent that prior to passage of the bill, Senator LEAHY be recognized for his remaining 12 minutes forth in the initial unanimous consent request, which was provided for under the original consent order, Senator LEVIN be in control of 4 minutes, Senator WARNER in control of 16 minutes, to be followed by closing remarks by the two leaders and, following that time, the Senate proceed to passage of the bill; further, that there then be 5 minutes equally divided prior to the vote on invoking cloture on the border fence legislation; provided further that with respect to the border fence bill, it be in order to file second degrees at the desk no later than 5 p.m. today under the provisions of rule XXII.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I did not understand the part about the fence.

Mr. WARNER. Can the Senator repeat that?

Mr. LEAHY. I did not understand the part about the timing of the fence bill.

Mr. WARNER. I will repeat it.

Mr. LEAHY. Just that part.

Mr. WARNER. It reads as follows:

Following that time, the Senate proceed to passage of the bill; further, there then be 5 minutes equally divided prior to the vote on invoking cloture on the border fence legislation; provided further that with respect to the border fence bill, it be in order to file second degrees at the desk no later than 5 p.m. today under the provisions of rule XXII.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, even though I believe we have made a terrible and tragic mistake in the Senate, including major changes in our constitutional rights willy-nilly to get out to campaign, I realize they have locked this in and there is not much one can do about it. I think it is a farce in the Senate.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I renew the unanimous consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment No. 5095

There will now be 4 minutes of debate, equally divided, on the Rockefeller amendment.

The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, my amendment would require, as I explained this morning, the CIA to provide the Congressional Intelligence Committees, which are required by law to be informed of what is going on in the intelligence world, fully the most basic and fundamental information it needs to oversee the CIA detention and interrogation program.

Frankly, for the past 4 years we have not had that information. The administration has withheld this information from us. I am not saying that in partisan fashion. It is a fact.

It has been very frustrating as a member of the Intelligence Committee, much less as a Member of the Senate. We have made repeated requests and the Intelligence Committee has been prevented from carefully reviewing the program. The program has operated, as a result, without any meaningful congressional oversight whatsoever, and that is our responsibility under the law.

All of my colleagues should be troubled by this fact. We cannot assure ourselves, we cannot assure the American people, and we cannot assure our agents overseas that the CIA program is both legal and an effective and, without the basic information required under my amendment.

My amendment is simply about oversight and accountability, nothing more, nothing less. Nothing in the amendment would require the public disclosure of any classified document or aspect of the CIA program.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator FEINSTEIN be added as a cosponsor of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I spoke in strong opposition to this amendment. Again, I think it tries to displace the oversight that is performed by the Intelligence Committee. I would like to add the following bit of information.

On September 29, 2006, GEN Michael V. Hayden, who is the current Director of the CIA, wrote a letter to Chairman PAT ROBERTS of the Intelligence Committee in the Senate. In it he said:

On September 6, 2006, I briefed the full SSCI membership on key aspects of the detainee program, providing a level of detail
June 28, 2006

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE S10397

previously not made available to SSCI members. I made clear to the committee that upon passage of the new detainee legislation, I would brief the SSCI on how CIA would execute the future program, and I agreed to promptly notify the committee when any modifications to the program were proposed, or when the status of any individual detainee changed.

I think that is dispositive of a very clear indication by the executive branch to allow the Senate to perform its oversight through the properly designated committee, the Senate Committee on Intelligence.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. PAT ROBERTS, Chairman, Select Committee on Intelligence, United States Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I write today regarding the Rockefeller amendment to the military commissions legislation now pending on the Senate floor. The CIA strongly opposes adoption of the Rockefeller amendment.

Since the inception of its detention program, the CIA has a strong and consistent record of keeping its oversight committees fully and currently informed of critical aspects of the program. Further, the bipartisan leadership of Congress has been briefed regularly by the CIA on this program since its inception, and I personally briefed the Majority and Minority Leaders of the Senate only weeks ago. The CIA remains committed to a frank and open dialogue with the Congress on detailed aspects of the detainee program, while ensuring the secrecy of this particularly sensitive activity. Senate adoption of the Rockefeller amendment would go far beyond traditional CIA reports to Congress by mandating detailed information about as sets, methods, locations and individuals involved in sensitive operations. In addition, detailing in public law the amount of sensitive information that CIA must provide to Congress on our counterterrorism partners whose cooperation is fully conditioned on the absolute secrecy of their support.

Since becoming Director of the CIA, I have made every effort to keep your committee apprised of the status of the detainee program. In July, I updated you and SSCI Vice Chairman Rockefeller on the program, sharing sensitive aspects, including information about specific detainees, examples of actionable intelligence derived from the program and about ways in which the program could continue to be successful in the future. Following this briefing and despite its highly sensitive nature, at your request—and that of Sen. Rockefeller—I fully supported briefing the entire SSCI membership.

On September 6, 2006, I briefed the full SSCI on the key aspects of the detainee program, providing a level of detail previously not made available to all SSCI members. I made clear to the committee that upon passage of new detainee legislation, I would brief the SSCI on how CIA would execute the future program and I agreed to promptly notify the committee when any modifications to the program were proposed, or when the status of any individual detainee changed.

Upon Senate passage of the military commissions legislation, I stand ready to again brief your committee and the bipartisan Senate leadership on the future of the detainee program.

Sincerely,

MICHAEL V. HAYDEN, General, USAF Director.

The PRESIDENT OFFICER. Yes. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, are we prepared to move to a vote?

Here it is on voting rights. The Attorney General is authorized and directed to institute suits that are going to be involved in poll taxes.

The Secretary of State shall notify without delay foreign states that are involved in pollution. The list goes on. If we can do it for pollution, we can do it for violation of basic and fundamental rights of Americans overseas.

This is effectively about what we adopted when we adopted the War Crimes Act, which was virtually unanimous, with not a single vote in opposition.

This is basically a restatement. I hope it will be accepted overwhelmingly.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, this is an amendment that requires close attention by all colleagues.

In the preparation of this bill, we defined in broad terms the conduct that is regarded as a grave breach of Common Article 3. These are war crimes. We the Congress should not try to provide a specific list of techniques. We don’t know what the future holds. That is not the responsibility of the Congress. We are not going to direct. We try to make a list of techniques, that the United States describe every technique that violates Common Article 3. We cannot foresee into the future every technique that might violate Common Article 3. We should not step on that situation. It is not ours to do.

Under the separation of powers, it is reserved to the executive branch to work this out. But if at any time it is the judgment of any Member of this body, or collectively, that we are not abiding by this law, I am confident that this institution’s oversight will correct and quickly remedy the situation.

I yield the floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 5088

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 4 minutes equally divided on the Kennedy amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, here is the Army Manual of 2006 printed after the Senate of the United States went on record in accepting the McCain amendment prohibiting torture. In the printed Army Manual is a list of the prohibited activities where any person who is a member of the Defense Department is prohibited to engage in these kinds of activities because they have made a finding that they are basically and effectively torture.

Today we have thousands of Americans in the Central Intelligence Agency, Special Forces, the SEALS, and American contractors working for the CIA around the world fighting terrorism. All this amendment does is give notice to each and every country that any country that is going to practice these kinds of techniques on any American will be guilty effectively of a war crime.

That is effectively what we have done with the Army Manual, and we ought to protect our intelligence agency personnel, our SEALS, and all of those who are all over the world protecting the United States.

Arguments against? It is a violation of the Constitution because it is an instruction to a member of the Cabinet about what they ought to do.

Here it is for airports. The Secretary of Transportation shall conduct an assessment with foreign countries.

The amendment (No. 5088) was rejected.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. LEVIN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. WARNER. I ask the Presiding Officer to read the unanimous consent that is in place so all Members understand what is to take place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator Leahy will be recognized for his remaining 12 minutes. Senator LEVIN is under the control of 4 minutes, Senator WARNER is under the control of 16 minutes, to be followed by closing remarks by the two leaders. Following that time, the Senator from Colorado will have time to passage of the bill. Further, that there then be 5 minutes equally divided prior to the vote on the motion to invoke cloture on border fence legislation.

Mr. WARNER. The Chair will now recognize Senator LEAHY?

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, my understanding is that was the allocation of time, not necessarily the order of speaking.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The agreement does not appear to be in any particular order.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, at the appropriate time, I will allocate 14 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Arizona, Mr. McCain.

At this point in time, I recognize the extraordinary contributions of the staff persons who worked on this bill, and I shall include the entire list.

We worked under the direction of Charlie Abell, Scott Stucky, David Morris, Rick DeBoves, Peter Levine, Chris Paul, Pablo Chavez, Richard Fontaine, Jen Olson, Adam Brake, James Galyean, and legislative counsel Charlie Armstrong.

I assure Members it was a challenge from beginning to end. I cannot recall seeing a more professional group of staffers serving their Members in the Senate.

Mr. LEVIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask unanimous consent that the time not be charged to either side or to any party.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.
The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. INHOFE. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST—S. 2781

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar 625, S. 2781, and I ask unanimous consent that the committee-reported amendment be, for the third time, passed and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I object. I agree that wastewater security is an important issue. In fact, it is made even more important because the Homeland Security appropriation conferences have exempted these facilities from security requirements—a decision that I understand was due in large part to the Senator from Arizona. If we are going to include these facilities within the protections of that bill.

Although I would like to have seen stronger chemical security provisions than those we are about to consider are forthcoming from the Homeland Security appropriations conference, I anticipate supporting that measure. I would support including wastewater facilities in that measure. But I will not support a bill like S. 2781 that provides weaker protections.

By contrast, I long ago introduced S. 95, the Wastewater Treatment Works Security Act of 2005. I feel certain that if I asked unanimous consent to pass this bill, the Senator would object to my request. I prefer a more constructive pathway to providing essential protection to our communities.

We should fill this gap in our Nation’s security, and in order to do so, we may need to offer amendments to cure the serious deficiencies in this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert a statement in the Record concerning my objection to consideration of the Wastewater Security bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I wanted to call the Senate’s attention to the fact we do have wastewater legislation that has passed both the House and the Senate, in the House by a vote of 413 to 2. It is something which is desperately needed. We need to attend to that as soon as possible.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROVISIONS OF THE MILITARY COMMISSIONS ACT

Mr. LEVIN. Senators WARNER and MCCAIN, over the last year, you have played an instrumental role in bringing needed clarity to the rules for the treatment of detainees in U.S. custody. I understand that you also played a key role in negotiating the provisions of the military commissions bill regarding the military commissions Act and Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions. As you said last year when the Detainee Treatment Act was adopted, this is not an area in which ambiguity is helpful. For this reason, I hope that you will help me in providing a clear record of our issues and concerns.

In particular, section 8(a)(3) of the bill provides that “the President has the authority for the United States to interpret the meaning and application of the Geneva Conventions”, that these interpretations shall be issued by Executive order, and that such an Executive order “shall be authoritative (as to non-grave breach provisions of Common Article 3) as a matter of United States law, in the same manner as other administrative interpretations.”

Would you agree that nothing in this provision gives the President or could give the President the authority to modify the Geneva Conventions or U.S. obligations under those treaties?

Mr. MCCAIN. First, I say to my good friend from Michigan that this legislation clearly defines grave breaches of Common Article 3, which are criminalized and ultimately punishable by death. It is critical for the American public to understand that we are not criminalizing breaches of Common Article 3 that rise to the level of a felony. Such acts—including cruel or inhuman treatment, torture, rape, and murder, among others—will clearly be considered war crimes.

Where the President may exercise his authority to interpret treaty obligations is in the area of “nongrave” breaches of the Geneva Conventions—those breaches that do not rise to the level of a felony. In interpreting the conventions in this manner, the President is bound by the conventions themselves. Nothing in this bill gives the President the authority to modify the conventions or our obligations under those treaties. That understanding is at the core of this legislation.

Mr. WARNER. I concur with the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. LEVIN. Would you agree that nothing in this provision gives the President, or could give the President, the authority to modify the requirements of the Detainee Treatment Act?

Mr. WARNER. The purpose of this legislation is to strengthen, not to weaken or modify, the Detainee Treatment Act. For the first time, this legislation is required to “take action to ensure compliance” with the DTA’s prohibition on cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment, as defined in the U.S. reservations to the Convention Against Torture. He is directed to do so through, among other actions, the establishment of administrative rules and procedures. Nothing in this legislation authorizes the President to modify the requirements of the DTA, which were enshrined in a law passed last December. I would point out as well to the distinguished ranking member that the President himself never proposed to weaken the DTA. Rather, he proposed to modify the DTA tantamount to compliance with Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions. That proposal is not included in this legislation.

Mr. MCCAIN. I agree entirely with Senator WARNER’s amendments.

Mr. LEVIN. Would you agree that any interpretation issued by the President under this section would only be valid if it is consistent with U.S. obligations under the Geneva Conventions and the Detainee Treatment Act?

Mr. MCCAIN. That is correct.

Mr. WARNER. I agree.

Mr. LEVIN. Section 8(b) of the bill would amend the War Crimes Act to make it clear that only ‘acts’ of Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions constitute war crimes under U.S. law. The provision goes on to define those grave breaches to include, among other things, torture, and ‘cruel or inhuman treatment’. The term ‘cruel or inhuman treatment’ is defined to include acts “intended to inflict severe or serious physical or mental pain or suffering.”

Would you agree that the changes to the War Crimes Act in section 8(b) do not authorize the President to modify U.S. obligations under the Geneva Conventions or under the Detainee Treatment Act?

Mr. MCCAIN. The changes to the War Crimes Act are actually a responsible modification in order to better comply with America’s obligations under the Geneva Conventions to provide effective penal sanction for grave breaches of Common Article 3. It is important to note, as has the Senator from Michigan, that in this section “cruel or inhuman treatment” is defined for purposes of the War Crimes Act only. It does not infringe, supplant, or in any way alter the definition of cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment or punishment prohibited in the DTA and defined therein with reference to the 5th, 8th, and 14th amendments to the U.S. Constitution. Nor do the changes to the War Crimes Act alter U.S. obligations under the Geneva Conventions.

Mr. WARNER. I would associate myself with the comments from the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. LEVIN. Would you agree that nothing in this section or in this bill requires or should be interpreted to authorize any modification to the new Army Field Manual on interrogation techniques, which was issued last month and provides important guidance to our soldiers on the field as to what is and is not permitted to the interrogation of detainees?

Mr. WARNER. The executive branch has the authority to modify the Army Field Manual on Intelligence Interrogation at any time. I welcomed the new version of the field manual issued last month and agree that it provides critical guidance to our soldiers in the field. That said, the content of the field manual is an issue separate from those at issue in this bill, and it was not my intent to affect any change in the field manual through this legislation.

Mr. McCAIN. I concur wholeheartedly with the Senator from Virginia. As the Senator from Virginia is aware, there is a provision in the bill before the Senate that defines “cruel and inhuman treatment” under the War Crimes Act. I would note first that this definition is limited to criminal offenses under the War Crimes Act and is distinct from the broader prohibition contained in the Detainee Treatment Act. That act defined the term “cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment” with reference to the reservation the United States took to the Convention Against Torture.

In the war crimes section of this bill, cruel and inhuman treatment is defined. It is intended to extend the law beyond torture, to cover or serious physical or mental pain or suffering. It further makes clear that such mental suffering need not be prolonged to be prohibited. The mental suffering need only be more than transitory and of an abuse or cruelty.” The “nontransitory” requirement applies to the harm, not to the act producing the harm. Thus if a U.S. soldier is, for example, subjected to some terrible technique that lasts for a brief time but that causes serious and nontransitory mental harm, a criminal act has occurred.

Mr. WARNER. That is my understanding and intent as well, and I agree with the Senator’s other clarifying remarks.

In the same section, the term “serious physical pain or suffering” is defined as a bodily injury that involves one of four characteristics: “a substantial risk of death,” “extreme physical pain,” “prolonged physical disfigurement or a serious nature,” or “significant loss or impairment of the function of a bodily member, organ or mental faculty.” I do not believe that the term “bodily injury” adds a separate requirement which must be met for an act to constitute serious physical pain or suffering.

Mr. McCAIN. I am of the same view. Mr. LEVIN. And would the Senator from Arizona agree with my view that section 8(a)(3) does not make lawful or give the President the authority to make lawful any technique that is not permitted by Common Article 3 or the Detainee Treatment Act?

Mr. McCAIN. I do agree.

Mr. WARNER. I agree with both of my colleagues.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, in times of war, our obligation is to protect our Nation and to protect those men and women who risk their lives to defend it. This bill fails that duty. By failing to renounce torture, it inflames an already dangerous world and makes new enemies for America in our war against terror. This puts cause or people and our troops at greater risk. That is why so many respected military leaders oppose this bill.

Throughout our history, America has led the world in promoting human rights and decency. We have fought wars against tyranny and oppression. Our enemies use extreme and outlandish tactics that were rightly and roundly condemned by the civilized world. We maintained American strength and honor by refusing to stoop to the level of our enemies. And we should not stoop to the level of the terrorists in the war on terror.

I rise to express my profound opposition to this bill both in terms of its substance and the procedure by which it reached the floor. The Armed Services Committee reported out a bill that I supported. That bill was not perfect, but it preserved our commitment to the Geneva Conventions, limited the possibility that detainees would be treated abusively and set up procedures for reviewing claims that generally respected the fundamental requirements of fairness.

Republican members of the Armed Services Committee then began a process of secret negotiation with the White House. Eventually a bill that is far worse than the committee bill. Indeed, we have continued to see changes in that bill as it has been moved toward the floor in a rush to achieve passage before the Senate recesses for the election. This rush to passage to serve a political agenda is no way to produce careful and thoughtful legislation on profound issues of national security and civil liberties. At this point, most Members of this body hardly know what they are being asked to approve.

The bill as it now appears on the floor works profound and disastrous changes in our law.

This legislation sets out an overly broad definition of unlawful enemy combatant. This definition would allow the President to pick up anyone citizen and legal residents included anywhere around the world, and throw them into prison in Guantanamo without even charging or trying them. These people would never get a day in court to prove their innocence. There is no check whatsoever on the President’s ability to detain people in an arbitrary manner.

We already know that our military has made mistakes in detaining people. We are currently holding dozens of people at Guantánamo who know based on the military’s own records are not guilty of anything. Yet they have not been released.

This legislation also makes a distinction between citizens and lawful permanent residents. Citizens cannot be subject to military commissions and their flawed procedures. Yet lawful permanent residents, those green card holders on the path to citizenship, could be sent to military commissions. Green Card holders must obey our laws, pay taxes, and register for the draft. They are serving our country in Iraq. They have an obligation to protect our laws, and they deserve the protection of those same laws.

The Geneva Conventions were adopted in the wake of the horrific atrocities during World War II. These conventions reflect the consensus on how individuals should be treated in times of war. They set a minimum floor of humane treatment for all prisoners, military and civilian alike. This floor is known as Common Article 3 because it is common to all of the Conventions. Yet the President’s authority to decide what conduct violates Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions. Again, the President’s authority to define the meaning of Common Article 3 is virtually unreviewable. He is required to publish his interpretation in the Federal Register, but the administration has already made clear that it will not make public which interrogation tactics are being used. Moreover, the bill expressly states that the Geneva Conventions cannot be relied upon in any U.S. court as a source of rights. The President’s interpretation may well likely escape judicial review, as well.

As the final method of concealing its activities, the administration has stripped the courts of their ability to review the confinement or treatment of detainees. The administration won a provision that eliminates the ability of any detainee anywhere in the world to file a habeas corpus petition challenging the justification for or conditions of his or her confinement. The provision applies to all existing petitions and would require their dismissal, including the Hamdan case itself. There is no justification for stripping courts of jurisdiction to issue the Great Writ of habeas corpus which has been a foundation of our legal system with roots in the Magna Carta. The availability of the Great Writ is assured in the Constitution itself, which permits its suspension only in times of invasion or rebellion. This provision of the bill is most likely unconstitutional.

The administration has pursued a strategy to defeat accountability since it first began to take detainees into custody. It chose Guantánamo and secret prisons abroad because it thought U.S. law would not apply. It fought hard to prevent detainees from obtaining counsel and then argued that U.S. Courts lacked jurisdiction to hear detainees’ complaints. It sought the prohibition on habeas corpus petitions adopted in the Detainee Treatment Act and then urged courts to misconstrue it to wipe out all pending habeas cases. This new effort to prohibit habeas petitions is a continuation of this effort to escape judicial scrutiny.

The bill also for the first time in our history will authorize the introduction of evidence obtained by torture in a judicial proceeding. Our courts have always rejected this type of evidence.
because it is inconsistent with fundamental notions of justice, and also because it is unreliable. We know that detainees were subjected to harsh interrogation techniques, and made statements as a result. Under this legislation, if those statements were made in the course of the passage of the McCain Amendment last winter, then they are admissible. The Congress is saying for the first time in our nation’s history that statements obtained by torture are admissible. This fact, alone, is a stunning statement of how far we have strayed from our bedrock values.

It defines conduct that can be prosecuted as a war crime in a very narrow way that appears designed to exclude many of the abusive interrogation practices that this administration has employed. While some have argued that cruel and inhumane practices such as waterboarding, induced hypothermia and sleep deprivation would surely be covered, the White House and the Republican leadership have refused to commit to this basic interpretation of the bill.

We tried to improve this bill. A number of amendments were offered and should have been adopted. I offered an amendment that responds to the lack of clarity about which practices are prohibited by the bill. Because the administration has refused to commit itself to stop using specific abusive interrogation procedures, our commitment to the standards of Common Article 3 is in doubt. That puts our own people at risk. As military leaders have repeatedly stated, our adherence to the Geneva Conventions is essential to protect our own people around the world.

America has thousands of people across the globe who do not wear uniforms, but put their lives on the line to protect this country every day. CIA agents, Special Forces members, contractors, journalists and others will all be learning our back the standards of Common Article 3.

The bill as it has reached the floor would diminish the security and safety of Americans everywhere and further erode our civil liberties. I strongly oppose this bill.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, we hear on a daily basis about the war we are currently engaged in, the war on terror, but I don’t think most of us stop to think about what that actually means.

As citizens of the greatest country in the world, we have become so accustomed to all the rights afforded us by our Constitution that we now take them for granted. We are incredibly fortunate to live in a nation that our freedom and safety is our Government’s first priority.

We aren’t living in the world I grew up in. Our Nation was rocked to its core 5 years ago when we were attacked on our soil. Thousands of innocent Americans were murdered simply because they lived in the one country that, above all others, embodies freedom and democracy. The mastermind behind those attacks was Khalid Shaikh Mohammed, who is now in custody and soon will be brought to justice.

In the aftermath of these attacks, Congress demonstrated our commitment to “use all necessary force against those nations, organizations, or persons he determines planned, authorized, committed or aided the terrorist attacks that occurred on September 11, 2001, or harbored such organizations or persons.” President Bush used this authorization, combined with his constitutional powers to make these sorts of judgments during times of war, to try enemy combatants in military commissions.

Earlier this month, we observed the 5-year anniversary of the horrific attacks on America. I cannot imagine the reaction that would have come if, 5 years ago, Members of Congress had stood on this floor and suggested that we would turn our backs on the war on terror and not prosecute another attack on our country. Five years ago, with the images of the collapsing Twin Towers and the burning Pentagon and the smoldering Pennsylvania field seared into our memories, we said we would use our military might to prevent such a thing from ever happening again in our country.

In the aftermath of these attacks, the Supreme Court’s decision in Hamdan v. Rumsfeld, which the Court ruled that the administration’s use of military commissions to try unlawful enemy combatants violated international law. This decision forced our interrogators, key in defending America from terrorist attack, to curtail their investigations. Without a clarification of the vague requirements, these interrogators might be subject to prosecution for war crimes. It also brought to an end the prosecution of unlawful enemy combatants through the military commissions.

It is key to point out that military commissions have been used throughout American history to bring enemy combatants to justice since before the United States was even officially formed. George Washington used them during the American Revolution, and since our Constitution was ratified, Presidents have used military commissions to try those who seek to harm Americans during every major conflict. Some of our most popular Presidents from history have taken this route, including Abraham Lincoln and Franklin Roosevelt. Whenever the leaders of this great Nation have seen threats posed by those who refuse to abide by the rules of war, they have taken the necessary steps to protect us.

Our President has come to us and asked for help in trying these terrorists whose sole goal is to kill those who love freedom. He has asked for our help in ensuring that those investigating potential terrorist plots against our Nation and our citizens are secure from the threat of undefined war crimes. These people are part of our first line of defense in securing the safety of our country—we owe it to them to protect them. Because of the Supreme Court’s decision in Hamdan, the only way these terrorists will be brought to justice and our interrogators will be protected for doing their jobs is for Congress to write a new law establishing the military commissions and clarifying our obligations under the Geneva Conventions.

I firmly believe that enemy combatants in our custody enjoyed ample due process in the military commissions established by the administration, which were brought to a halt by the Supreme Court. The compromise that we are considering here today gives more rights to terrorists who were caught trying to harm America and our allies. Chairman WARNER, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a joint statement regarding alleged violations of the Geneva Conventions.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JOINT STATEMENT OF SENATORS MCCAIN, WARNER, AND GRAHAM ON INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS UNDER THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS, SEPTEMBER 28, 2006

Mr. President, we are submitting this statement into the record because it has been suggested by some that this legislation would prohibit litigants from raising alleged violations of the Geneva Conventions. This suggestion is misleading on three counts.

First, it presumes that individuals currently have a private right of action under Geneva. Secondly, it implies that the Congress is restricting individuals from raising claims that the Geneva Conventions have been violated as a collateral matter once they have an independent cause of action. Finally, this legislation would not stop in any way a court from exercising any power it has to consider the United States’ obligations under the Geneva Conventions, regardless of what litigants say or do say in the documents that they file with the Court.

The Supreme Court’s decision in Hamdan left untouched the widely-held view that the Geneva Conventions provide no private rights of action to individuals. And, in fact, the majority in Hamdan suggested that the Geneva Conventions do not afford individuals private rights of action, although it did not need to reach the question of the Supreme Court’s decision. This view has been underscored by judicial precedent—and even Salim Hamdan
The bill preserves our ability to continue to protect America, it also provides detainees with fair procedural rights.

In fact, this legislation provides broader protections for defendants than did Nuremberg. Liberal law professor Cass Sunstein has written that the military commissions authorized by the President in 2001 provide far greater procedural safeguards than any previous military commission, including Nuremberg. Let me say that again: liberal law professor Cass Sunstein noted that the President’s 2001 military order provided far greater procedural safeguards than the President’s 2001 military order.

This system is exceedingly fair since al-Qaida in no way follows the Geneva Conventions or any other international norm. Al-Qaida respects no law, no authority, no legitimacy but that of its own twisted strain of radical Islam. Not only does al-Qaida deny defendants the procedures and rights to Americans they capture. Look at journalist Daniel Pearl, who was beheaded by al-Qaida in Pakistan in 2002. Al-Qaida simply executes those they capture, even civilians like Pearl. Not only do they inappropriately kill innocent civilians, they broadcast these brutal executions on the Internet for all to see.
Mr. President, I would just conclude by saying that this legislation is vitally important. It is vitally important because it is wartime legislation. It is vitally important because this bill protects our national security, it protects classified information, and it protects the rights of defendants. Most important, it protects America. For these reasons, I urge its passage.

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, once the Military Commissions Act, MCA, is signed into law, the Defense Department, DOD, will be able to conduct CSRT hearings forever, or in all future wars. The DTA is to simply ensure that the military, and how they have disrupted interrogations at Guantanamo. Putting an end to that was the major purpose of the DTA. Today, with the MCA, we see to it that this goal is effectively achieved.

Another major improvement that the MCA makes to the DTA is that it tightens the bar on nonhabeas lawsuits contained in 28 U.S.C. §2241(e)(2). That paragraph, as enacted by the DTA, barred postrelease conditions-of-confinement lawsuits, but only if the detainee had been found to be properly detained as an enemy combatant by the U.S. Court of Appeals on review of a CSRT hearing. Although nothing in the DTA or MCA directly requires the military to conduct CSRTs, this limitation on the bar on non-habeas actions effectively did compel the military to hold CSRTs—and to somehow get the detainee to appeal to the DC Circuit.

There is no invitation in the DTA or MCA to reconsider the sufficiency of the evidence. Weighing of the evidence is a function for the military when the question is whether someone is an enemy combatant. Courts simply lack the competence—the knowledge of the battlefield and the nature of our foreign adversary. To judge whether particular facts show that someone is an enemy combatant. Making review exclusive to the DC Circuit, the DTA helps to ensure that the narrow review standards it sets do not somehow grow into something akin to Federal courts habeas corpus review of State criminal convictions. The court’s role under the DTA is to simply ensure that the military applied the right rules to the facts. It is not the court’s role to interpret those facts and decide what they mean.

Because review under the DTA and MCA will be limited to the administrative record, there is no need for any lawyer to ever again go to Guantanamo to represent an enemy combatant challenging his detention. The military, I am certain, will make the paper record available inside the United States. This is one of the major benefits of enacting the MCA. As I and others have noted previously, the hundreds of lawyer visits to the spark and these lawyers have even bragged about having led to leaks of information that have made it harder for our troops there to do their job, to keep order at Guantanamo. Some of these detainee lawyers have even bragged about what a burden their activities have been on the military, and how they have disrupted interrogations at Guantanamo. This is important because many detainees were released before CSRTs were held. Those who were properly detained as enemy combatants to be able to sue the U.S. military. And we do not want to force the military to hold CSRT hearings forever, or in all future wars. Instead, under the new language, the determination that is the precondition to the litigation bar is purely an executive determination. It is only what the United States has decided that will matter.

In addition, the language of (e)(2) focuses on the propriety of the initial detention. There inevitably will be detainees who are captured by U.S. troops, or who are handed over to us by third parties, who initially appear to be enemy combatants. But who, upon further inquiry, are found to be innocent of committing any crime. The inquiry created here is not unlike that for reviewing, in the civilian criminal justice context, the propriety of an arrest. An arrest might be entirely legal, might be based on sufficient probable cause, even if the arrestee is later conclusively found to be innocent of committing any crime. The arresting officer cannot be sued and held liable for making that initial arrest, so long as the arrest itself was supported by probable cause, even if the arrestee was arrested because the suspect was not later convicted of a crime. Similarly, under 2241(e)(2), detainees will not be able to sue their captors and custodians if the United States determines that it was the right decision to take the individual into custody.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I would like to make a few comments about section 7 of the bill that is before us today. This section makes a number of improvements to the Detainee Treatment Act, which was passed by the Congress and signed into law on December 30 of last year. First, section 7 will fulfill one of the original objectives of the DTA: to get the lawyers out of Guantanamo. As my colleague Senator GRAHAM has noted, these lawyers have even bragged about the fact that their presence and activities at Guantanamo have made it harder for the military to do its job. Mr. Michael Ratner, the director of the Center for Constitutional Rights, which coordinated much of the detainee habeas litigation, had this to say about his activities to a magazine:

The litigation is brutal for [the United States.] It’s huge. We have over one hundred lawyers now from big and small firms working to represent the detainees. Every time an attorney goes down there, it makes it that much harder [for the U.S. military] to do what they’re doing. You can’t run an interrogation . . . with attorneys. What are they going to do now that we’re getting court orders for more lawyers to do what they’re doing? This is what Congress thought that it was putting an end to when it enacted the DTA in 2005. That act provided that “no court, justice, or judge shall have jurisdiction to hear or consider” claims filed by Guantanamo detainees, except under the review standards created by that Act. The DTA was made effective immediately upon the date of its enactment. And as Justice Scalia noted in his Hamdan v. Rumsfeld dissenting opinion, the DTA did not make an exception for lawsuits that were pending when the statute was enacted. Justice Scalia also pointed out that “[a]n ancient and unbroken line of authority attests that statutes ousting jurisdiction unambiguously apply to cases pending on the effective date.” He also noted that up until the Hamdan decision, “one cannot cite a single case in the history of Anglo-American law in which a jurisdiction-stripping provision was denied immediate effect in new cases pending an explicit statutory reservation.”

The Hamdan majority, on the other hand, found that the Supreme Court’s precedents governing jurisdictional statutes were trumped in that case by a legislative intent to preserve the pending lawsuits. This congressional intent, the majority concluded, was manifested in minor changes that had been made to the language of the bill and, most expressly, in statements made by Senators regarding the intended effect of the bill. As Senator Graham has explained in detail in remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on August 3, at 152 Cong. Rec. S1777, it appears that the Supreme Court was misled about the legislative history of the DTA by the lawyers for Hamdan. Those lawyers misrepresented the nature of the statements made in the Senate and caused the court to believe that Congress had an intent other than that reflected in the text of the statute. It certainly was not my intent, when I voted for the DTA, to exempt all of the pending Guantanamo lawsuits from the provisions of that act.

Section 7 of the Military Commissions Act fixes this feature of the DTA and ensures that there is no possibility of congressional intent, regardless of whether the detainee has been through the DC Circuit under the DTA or has been through a Combatant Status Review Tribunal hearing. The previous version of this bar, the DTA, allowed detainees to bring conditions-of-confinement lawsuits after their release if their detention was not reviewed by the DC Circuit. Obviously, the Government could not force the detainee to appeal, and there are some who were released before CSRT hearings were instituted. The new bill states that as long as the military decides that it was appropriate to take the individual into custody as an enemy combatant, as a security risk in relation to a war, that person cannot turn around and sue our military after he is released. It should not be held against our soldiers that they take some risk, because we know there is no evidence behind the military’s evidentiary findings. The courts clearly should be—then it should be allowed to review the evidence—without exception. The DTA restricts the court to determining whether the prior CSRTs followed their own procedures.

I have also come into possession of a so-called fact sheet on the DTA review standards that is being distributed on Capitol Hill by Human Rights First, a group that is lobbying Senators to oppose the MCA and to support the Specter amendment that was defeated earlier today. This fact sheet is titled, “The Limited Review Allowed Under the DTA is No Substitute for Habeas.” Here is what the Human Rights First fact sheet says:

The DTA restricts the court to determining whether the prior CSRTs followed their own procedures.

It has been suggested that the court of appeals, in reviewing the CSRT decisions, can fix the problem simply by choosing to review the evidence itself. But that is simply not the way the statute reads. The government has chosen the first reading of the statute to say so. It is no solution to fix the problem simply by choosing to review the evidence, because we know there is no evidence behind the military’s evidentiary findings. It is simply not the way the statute reads. We are informed that the Justice Department has taken the “firm position” that no evidentiary review is permitted under the DTA. If Congress believes that the courts are unable to review the evidence—and they clearly should—then it should change the statute to say so. It is no solution to hope that the courts will ignore the actual statutory language and rewrite the statute to correct the deficiency.

There you have it. Senators have been told in floor debate by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee that the DTA “excludes on its face” any factual determination with regard to the Guantanamo detainees. Those groups lobbying Senators with regard to the MCA have pointed out that having courts make their own factual determinations, to judge the sufficiency of the evidence behind the military’s findings, “is simply not the way the statute reads.” We are informed that the Justice Department has taken the “firm position” that no evidentiary review is permitted under the DTA. And we are told that if we disagree with this system, if we think that “the courts should be able to review the evidence,” then we “should change the statute to say so.” The Senate is clearly on notice as to how the DTA review

The biggest change that the MCA makes to section 221(e) is that the new law applies globally, rather than just to Guantanamo detainees. We are legislating through this law for future generations, creating a system that will work not only throughout this war, but for future wars in which our Nation fights. In the future, we may again find ourselves involved in an armed conflict in which we capture large numbers of enemy soldiers. It is not unlikely that the safest and most secure place to hold those soldiers will be inside the United States. The fact that we hold those enemy soldiers in this country should not be an invitation for each of them to sue our Government. We held very large numbers of enemy soldiers in this country during World War II. They did not sue our Government seeking release. The Raszul decision would seem to have required that enemy combatants held in this country during wartime can come into court and demand a trial. The statute allows enemy combatants held in Cuba to sue, it is inevitable that those held inside this country would have been allowed to sue as well. That is simply not acceptable. It would make it very difficult to fight a major war in the future if ever a prisoner detained inside this country could sue our military. Through section 7 of the MCA, we not only solve our current problems with Guantanamo, but we plan for future conflicts as well. We enabled detainees to sue, and we enabled the Government to argue for an expansive interpretation of the judicial review allowed under the DTA. Paragraphs 2 and 3 of section 7 allow the DC Circuit to review a CSRT enemy combatant determination. The Government has provided a CSRT hearing to every detainee held at Guantanamo, with the likely exception of those transferred there this month, so all of those detainees will now be allowed to seek DTA review in the DC Circuit. Paragraphs 2 and 3 allow the DC Circuit to ask whether the military applied its own standards and procedures for CSRTs. The statute allows the court to ask whether those standards are constitutional and are consistent with nontreaty Federal law. I think that those standards speak for themselves, that they clearly allow only a very limited review. In particular, they do not allow the courts to reweigh the evidence, to take in evidence outside of the CSRT record, and to decide if the military was right about its factual judgment. At this time, however, both of these problems of section 7 of the MCA seem to agree on what kind of review it will allow. Earlier today, for example, I heard Senator Specter, who opposes section 7, criticize the paragraph 2 and 3 review standards on the Senate floor. He said, “the statute states that the Combatant Status Review Tribunal may be reviewed by the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia only to the extent that it was—the ruling was consistent with the standards and procedures specified by the Secretary of Defense. Now, to comply with the standards and procedures determined by the Secretary of Defense does not mean—excludes on its face—a factual determination as to what happens to the detainees.”
will work, what the statute says on its face, how the Justice Department has construed that statute. By rejecting the Specter amendment earlier today, and by passing the MCA later today, the Senate makes clear that it does not disagree with the Justice Department and does not want to change this system.

I will close my remarks by quoting at length from the testimony of U.S. Attorney General William Barr, who spoke on the matters addressed by this legislation at the Judiciary Committee on June 15, 2005. Mr. Barr’s testimony informs our understanding of the history, law, and practical reality underlying the DTA and the MCA. I would commend his statement to anyone seeking to understand these statutes and the complex relationship between the President’s war-making power and the judiciary. This relationship is superficially similar to, but is fundamentally different from, the judiciary’s role in the civilian justice system. I particularly found to be true Mr. Barr’s emphasis that the proper role of the courts in this area is not accurately described as “defense” to military decisions because deference implies that the ultimate decision lies with the courts. Mr. Barr notes, “the point here is that the ultimate substantive decision rests with the President and that the courts have no authority to substitute their judgments for that of the President.” Hence, except as permitted by the Constitution, the judicial role is a fact-based review of whether the detainees are, in fact, enemy combatants.

The determination that a particular foreign person seized on the battlefield is an enemy combatant has always been recognized as a matter committed to the sound judgment of the Commander in Chief and his military forces. There has never been a requirement that our military engage in evidentiary proceedings to establish that each individual captured is, in fact, an enemy combatant. The Guantanamo detainees at Guantanamo, the Deputy Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of the Navy have established Combatant Status Review Tribunals (“CSRT”) to permit each detainee a fact-based review of whether they are properly classified as enemy combatants and an opportunity to contest such designation.

As to the detention of enemy combatants, World War II provides a dramatic example. During that war, we held hundreds of thousands of Axis prisoners and Axis prisoners on the battlefield were sentenced, as a properly classified enemy combatant, to an armed force covered by the protections of the Geneva Convention and hence entitled to POW status. If the answer is yes, then the captives are held as prisoners of war entitled to be treated in accord with the various provisions of the Convention. If the answer is no, then the captives are held under humane conditions according to the common law of war, though not covered by the Geneva Convention. The threshold determination in deciding whether the Convention applies is a “group” decision, not an individualized decision.

The question is the military information to which the detainee belonged was covered by the Convention. This requires that the military force be that of a signatory to and a party to the Convention, and that the detainee is a foreign person captured on the battlefield. The Geneva Convention applies when the detainee is captured by the military force that is a signatory to and a party to the Convention. The Convention requires, for example, that signatory states provide the protections of the Geneva Convention and hence entitlement to POW status. If the answer is yes, then the captives are held as prisoners of war entitled to be treated in accord with the requirements of the Convention. If the answer is no, then the captives are held under humane conditions according to the common law of war, though not covered by the Convention.

I disagree with the Justice Department’s position that the CSRT process does not go far enough. I believe these assertions are frivolous. For example, I am aware of no legal precedent that supports the proposition that foreign persons confronted by U.S. troops in the zone of battle have Fifth Amendment rights that they can assert against the American troops. On the contrary, there are at least three reasons why the Fifth Amendment has no applicability to such a situation. First, the Supreme Court has consistently held that the Fifth Amendment does not go far enough. I believe these assertions are frivolous. I am aware of no general principles of law create, any juridical relation between our country and some undefined, limitless class of non-citizens who are beyond our territory. Moreover, as to the detention of enemy combatants, World War II provides a dramatic example. rules of the body politic. The Framers recognized that in the name of maintaining domestic tranquility an overseas government could oppress the very body politic it is meant to protect. The government itself could become an oppressor of the "people." Thus our Constitution makes the fundamental tradeoff between efficiency in the realm of law enforcement by granting the government that no punishment can be meted out in the absence of virtual certainty of individual guilt. The Constitution prescribes evidentiary standards at each stage of a criminal proceeding. The underlying premise in this realm is that it is better for society to suffer the cost of the guilty going free than mistakenly to deprive an innocent person of life or liberty. The situation is entirely different in armed conflict where the entire nation faces an external threat. In an armed conflict, the body politic is not using its domestic disciplinary powers to sanction an errant member, rather it is exercising its national power in defense of the nation from an external threat and preserving the very foundation of all of our civil liberties. Here the Constitution is not concerned with handicapping the government to preserve other objectives. Rather it is designed to maximize the government's efficiency to achieve victory—even at the cost of "collateral damage" that would be unacceptable in the domestic realm.

It seems to me that the kinds of military decisions at issue here—i.e., who poses a threat to our military operations—are quintessentially Executive in nature. They are not amenable to the type of process we employ in the domestic law enforcement arena. They cannot be reduced to neat legal formulas, purely objective tests and evidentiary standards. They necessarily require the exercise of prudential judgment and the weighing of risks. This is one of the reasons why the Constitution vests ultimate military decision-making in the President as Commander-in-Chief. The President, as Commander-in-Chief means anything, it must mean that the office holds the final authority to direct how, and against whom, military decision-making in the President as Commander-in-Chief. If the concept of Commander-in-Chief means anything, it must mean that the President directs military force against a foreign person—defined as to negate the Constitution's grant of that power to the President.

The Constitution's grant of "Commander-in-Chief" power must, at its core, mean the plenary authority to direct military force against persons the Commander judges as a threat to the safety of our troops, the safety of our homeland, or the ultimate military and political objectives of the conflict. At the heart of these kinds of military decisions is the fact that constitutes a threat or potential threat and what level of coercive force should be employed to deal with these dangers. These decisions cannot be reduced to binary standards or thresholds, that must be satisfied as a condition of the President ordering the use of military force against a particular individual. What would that standard be? Reasonable suspicion, probable cause, substantial evidence, preponderance of the evidence, or beyond a reasonable doubt? Or believe that the Constitution prohibits the President from using coercive military force against a foreign person—defined as to negate the Constitution's grant of that power to the President.

Let us posit a battlefield scenario. American troops are pinned down by sniper fire from a village. As the troops advance, they see two men running from a building firing implied expressions that could be construed as sniper fire. The troops believe they are probably a sniper team. Is it really being suggested that the Constitution vests these men with due process rights as against American soldiers? When do these rights arise? If the troops shoot and kill them—i.e., deprive them of life—could it be a violation of due process? Suppose they are wounded and it turns out they were not enemy forces. Does this give rise to Rovin's Constitutional tort actions for violation of due process? Alternatively, suppose the fleeing men are captured and held as enemy combatants. Does the due process clause really mean that they have to be released unless the military can prove they were enemy combatants? Does the Due Process Clause mean that the American military must invert its energies and sources from fighting the war and dedicate them to investigate the claims of innocence of these two men?

This illustrates why military decisions are not susceptible to judicial administration and supervision. There are simply no judicially manageable standards to either govern or evaluate military operational judgments. The Due Process Clause involves the weighing of risks. One can easily imagine situations in which there is an appreciable risk that someone is an enemy combatant, but significant uncertainty and not a preponderance of evidence. Nevertheless, the circumstances may be such that the President makes a judgment that prudence dictates treating such a person as hostile in order to avoid an unacceptable risk to our military operations. By their nature, these military judgments must rest upon a broad and expansive conception of prudence, predication, and even surmise. The President's assessment may include reports from his military and diplomatic advisors, field commanders, and other sources, all with just the same and the opinion of frontline troops. He must decide what weight to give each of these sources. He must evaluate risks in light of the present state of the conflict and the overall military and political objectives of the campaign.

I am not speaking here of "deference" to Presidential decisions. In some contexts, courts are fond of saying that they "owe deference" to some Executive decisions. But this suggests that the court has the ultimate decision-making authority and is only giving weight to the judgment of the Executive. This is not a question of deference—the point here is that substantive authority rests with the President and that courts have no authority to substitute their judgments for that of the President.

The military decision-making process is more akin to, and is on a basis for judicial supervision of our military operations in time of war would not only be wholly unprecedented, but it would prove to be wholly unworkable. The power to wage war itself, so altering and degrading that capacity as to negate the Constitution's grant of that power to the President.

First, the imposition of such procedures would fundamentally alter the character and mission of our combat troops. To the extent that the President makes decisions about enemy combatants are based in part on the circumstances of the initial encounter on the battlefield, our frontline troops will have to acclimate themselves with developing and preserving evidence as to each individual they capture, at the same time as they confront enemy forces in the field. They would be directed to spend their time on the rapid destruction of the enemy by all means at their disposal—to taking notes on the conduct of particular individuals in the field of battle. Like policemen, they would also face the prospect of removal from the battlefield to give evidence at post-battle proceedings. For the harm of this due process theory, the military would have to take on the further burden of detailed investigation of detaining factual claims once set to the research for further and fundamentally change the nature of the military enterprise. To establish the capacity to conduct individualized informal supervisory hearings as to every detained combatant would make the conduct of war—especially irregular warfare—vastly more cumbersome and expensive. Further, if the United States were to field three platoons of lawyers, investigators, and paralegals. Such a result would in effect "outsource" the military's operational decisions, divert resources from winning the war into demonstrating the individual "fault" of persons confronted in the field of battle, and thereby uniquely disadvantage our military vis-a-vis every other fighting force in the world.

Second, the introduction of an ultimate decision maker outside of the normal chain of command, or altogether outside the Executive Branch, would disrupt the unity of command and undermine the cohesion of our troops. The impartial tribunals could literally overrule command decisions regarding battlefield tactics. "Set free" persons whom American soldiers have risked or given their lives to capture. The effect of such a prospect on military discipline and morale is im- possible to predict.

The Supreme Court's decision in Rasul v. Bush does not undercut these long-standing principles. In Rasul, the Supreme Court addressed conflicting claims that the habeas statute applies extraterritorially—and expressly refrained from addressing these settled constitutional questions. The Court, in concluding that the habeas statute reached aliens held at Guantanamo Bay, relied on the peculiar language of the statute and the "extraordinary territorial ambit" of the writ at common law. Of course, the idiosyncrasies of the habeas statute do not have any impact on judicial interpretation of the reach of the Fifth Amendment or some other substantive constitutional provisions. Moreover, the Court's recognition in Rasul that the United States exercises control, but "not ultimate sovereignty" over the leased Guantanamo Bay territory would effectively render the applicability of the Fifth Amendment to aliens held there.

Nevertheless, even if Guantanamo Bay is somehow deemed sovereign United States territory, the Fifth Amendment is still inapplicable. The Supreme Court, in addition to the requisite designation on sovereignty of United States territory, demands that the aliens "receive constitutional protections" when they have also "developed substantial connections with this country"—whether under the Court's formulation, "lawful but involuntary" presence in the United States "is not of the sort to indicate any substantial connection with our country" sufficient to trigger constitutional protections. The "voluntary connection" necessary to trigger the Fifth Amendment's due process guarantee is somehow lacking with respect to enemy combatants.

Whatever else may be said, there can be no doubt that these individuals did not arrive at Guantanamo Bay by "voluntary" means. Enemy combatants that have been transported to Guantanamo Bay for detention thus are not entitled to Fifth Amendment due process rights. Indeed, it is clear that the Supreme Court's decision in Rasul was a statutory ruling, not a constitutional one. In other words, the Court concluded only that the federal habeas statute confers jurisdiction on federal district courts to hear claims brought by aliens detained at Guantanamo Bay. The Court nowhere suggested that the Constitution grants such aliens a right of access to American courts.

An important consequence flows: Congress could consider enacting legislation—either by creating special procedural rules for enemy alien detainees, by requiring any such habeas petitions to be brought in a particular court, or by prohibiting enemy aliens from halting military officials into court altogether."

Mr. President, with the Military Commissions Act, the Senate today enact[s] Mr. Barr’s third suggestion. We create a system that is consistent with our treaty obligations but that also is consistent with military tradition and the needs of our fighting forces in a time of war. It is a system that will serve this Nation well. I look forward to the day—assuming the United States succeeds in this war—when we can arrest and treat our military prisoners, just as we arrest and treat our military personnel in uniform.

Today, we are at war with extremists who want to do grievous harm to America. We all want to fight these extremists and defeat them. We all want to ensure that those who committed or supported acts of terror are brought to justice. The only disagreement is about how best to do that. What is the smartest, most effective way to fight and defeat our enemies?

Unfortunately, as the newly declassified National Intelligence Estimate testifies very clearly, our current course is, in many ways, playing into the hands of the terrorists. It is stirring up virulent anti-Americanism around the world, it is drawing new recruits to the jihadists’ cause, and it is making America less safe.

We have to do a better job, and we can do a better job. It is not good enough to be strong and wrong. We need to be strong and smart. This is especially true when it comes to our policies on interrogating and trying suspected terrorists. Again, we all want to extract information from these suspects. We all want to try them and, if guilty, punish them. The only disagreement is about how best to do that. What is the smartest, most effective way to interrogate and to try these suspected terrorists?

There is plenty of evidence that our current course, which clearly includes torturing suspects and imprisoning them without trial, is not working. To take just one case in point, consider the Canadian citizen, whom we now know to be completely innocent, who was arrested by the CIA—I use the word “arrest” loosely. He was picked up by the CIA, blindfolded, and sent to Syria for interrogation under torture. Not surprisingly, he told his torturers exactly what they wanted to hear—that he had received terrorist training in Afghanistan. The truth, of course, is that he was never in Afghanistan, had no terrorist ties, and is completely innocent.

The cost to the United States for this misjudgment of signals, of our forfeited reputation and moral standing, has been disastrous—just as the revelations of torture and abuse at Abu Ghraib. What is more, it has endangered our troops in the field—now and in the future—should they fall into the hands of the enemy. Have they the right to subject American prisoners to the same torture and abuse?

Again, it is not enough to be strong and wrong. We need to be strong and smart. We need to be true to 230 years of American jurisprudence, our Constitution, and the humane values that define us as Americans.

Back during the dark days of McCarthyism in the 1950s, former Senator Joseph McCarthy went on a rampage. He falsely accused literally thousands to the Communists. He falsely accused American people is that we have to become like the Communists in order to defeat them. Cooler heads prevailed but not until Senator McCarthy had done a lot of damage in this country, not only our people were blacklisted, denied employment, many of whom committed suicide because they had no place to turn. The dark days of Joseph McCarthy came back to us in the guise of this military tribunal bill.

We do not have to become like the jihadists. We don’t have to become like the terrorists in order to defeat them. The best way to defeat them is the same way we defeated Joseph McCarthy and the Communists. We stayed true to our American ideals, our American jurisprudence, and the humane values we cherish as a free society. Regrettably, the bill before us fails this test. I cannot, in good conscience, support it.

The bill includes no barrier on the President’s interpreting our obligations under the Geneva Conventions as he pleases, allowing practices such as simulated drowning, induced hypothermia, and extreme sleep deprivation. The President can allow all of those to continue, in contravention of the Geneva Conventions.

The bill before us rewrites the War Crimes Act in a way that fails to give clarity as to interrogation techniques that are allowed or forbidden, effectively allowing the administration—any administration—to continue the abusive techniques I just mentioned.

The bill creates a very bizarre double standard, immunizing on the one hand, policymakers and the CIA and its contractors for committing acts of torture—immunizing them while leaving our military troops subject to prosecution under the Uniform Code of Military Justice for the exact same practices. The bill creates this double standard: it immunizes the CIA, for example, and any contractors with the CIA, for committing acts of torture, while at the same time those same acts, if committed by a military person, would subject that military person to prosecution under the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

What kind of a signal does this send? What message does this send? This bill completely eliminates the ability of noncitizens to bring a habeas corpus petition, effectively removing the only remaining check on the administration’s decision regarding torture and other abuses.

The habeas provisions in this bill would permit—get this—the bill would permit a legal permanent resident of the United States—a legal permanent resident of the United States—to be snatched off the street in the dark of night, bound, blindfolded, subject to indefinite detention, even torture, with absolutely no way for that person to challenge it in court.

Is that what we want to become as a nation? A legal permanent resident in the United States, of which there are millions in this country, taken out of his or her home at night, and we don’t know what happens to them? They go into the dark dungeons of who knows where. Maybe Guantanamo Bay, the bill creates an immunity to people being held in indefinite detention who, in fact, have no connection to terrorism.

I heard one of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle going on yesterday about this habeas provision. He went on about how habeas corpus is to protect U.S. citizens. It is in no way, he went on, aimed at protecting enemy combatants who are picked up.

Therein lies the problem. How do we know they are enemy combatants? Is it because the CIA says they are an enemy combatant? Who says they are an enemy combatant? This is not World War II, folks, where the Germans were on one side and the Japanese are on the other side and they have uniforms, and the Japanese are on the other side and they have uniforms. This is an amorphous terrorist war where the terrorists don’t wear uniforms. They can be dressed like you or me. They can look just like you or me. So we don’t know.

We have instances where people have been thrown into Guantanamo, for example, and they were fingered by a neighbor who didn’t like them and wanted their property or house or didn’t like them because of something they had done to them in the past. They fingered them and said: Guess what. They are big terrorists. People were picked up and thrown in jail.

Habeas is the one provision that allows someone snatched off the streets here or anywhere else suspected of being a terrorist to at least come forward and say: What are the charges against me?

We have seen this happen in Guantanamo, we have seen people kept for months, for years, without ever having a charge filed against them, and many of them we found out were totally innocent.
What does this say to the rest of the world?

Senator Obama from Illinois told the story the other day about when he was in Chad in August and heard about an American citizen who was picked up in Sudan and held by the Sudanese. He made a special trip to get this person released. It was an American journalist. After a while, he was released.

The American journalist came back and said: I was picked up by the Suda- nese officials. I asked for permission to contact the U.S. Embassy with a phone call so I could talk to our Embassy.

The Sudanese captor said: Why should we let you do that? You don’t let the people in Guantanamo Bay do that.

The use of habeas is not just to pro- tect the people who are suspected so that we know whether they really are an enemy combatant. It is also as a protection for our troops, our soldiers, our civilians, our business people traveling around the world, people traveling on vacation, journalists, just like this one, who may be snatched, picked up by a foreign government. We want to be able to say to that government: Produce the person. What are the charges? Allow it, we are giving the green light to every other would-be dictator anywhere in the world to do the same thing—any gov- ernment anywhere.

If the moral argument against tortu- re does not hold any weight with this administration, they should just examine the abundant evidence that torture simply doesn’t work. This is not just my opinion, this is what the experts are saying.

Let me quote from a letter signed by 20 former U.S. Army interrogators and interrogation technicians:

Prisoner/detainee abuse and torture are to be avoided at all costs, in part because they can degrade the intelligence collection effort by interfering with a skilled interrogator’s efforts to establish rapport with the subject.

Simply put, torture does not help gather useful, reliable, actionable in- telligence. In fact, it inhibits the collection of such intelligence.

Earlier this month, the U.S. Army released its new field manual 222.3: “Human Intelligence Collector Oper- ations,” which covers interrogations by the U.S. military in detail. This manual replaces the previous manual and is recognized by our military per- sonnel around the world in performing interrogations.

The Army Field Manual explicitly bans, among other things, beating pris- oners, sexually humiliating them, threatening them with dogs, depriving them of food and water, performing mock executions, shocking them with electricity, burning them, causing other pain, or subjecting them to the technique called waterboarding, which simulates drowning.

So why are these techniques are explicitly banned in the Army Field Manual, why shouldn't they be explicitly banned for CIA personnel or CIA contractors?

For me, this debate about illegal im- prisonment and officially sanctioned torture is not an abstraction. It strikes very close to home.

Thirty-six years ago this summer at the height of the Vietnam war, I brought back photographs of the so-called tiger cages at Con Son Island where the U.S. committed some of the most cruel, sadistic, degrading abuses against people we committed no crime whatsoever, were being tortured and killed with the full knowledge and sanction of the U.S. Government. That was July of 1970 when I was a staff person in the House of Representatives working with a congressional delegation on a fact- finding trip to Vietnam.

We had all heard reports about the possible existence of these so-called tiger cages in which people were brutally tortured and killed. Our State De- partment and our military officials de- nied their existence. They said it was only Communist propaganda.

Through various sources, I thought that the reports about the tiger cages were at least credible and should be in- vestigated further.

Thanks to the courage of Congress- man William Anderson of Tennessee and Congressman Augustus Hawkins of California and to Don Luce, an Amer- ican working for a nongovernmental organization, and because of the brav- ery of a young Vietnamese man who gave us the maps on how to find the prison, we were able to expose the tiger cages on Con Son Island.

This young Vietnamese man about whom I speak was let out of the tiger cages, but they kept his brother, and they said: If you breathe one word about this, we are going to kill your brother.

Why did they let him out of the tiger cages? Because he was president of the student body at Saigon University. What had been his crime? He had dem- onstrated against the war. So they placed him out and his brother and threw them in the tiger cages and tortured them.

The students refused to go back to class—this was a big deal—until they returned this young man to his univer- sity, which they did, but they kept his brother. If he dare to breathe a word of this, we will kill him.

This young man decided he needed to take a chance, and he took a chance on me. He drew the maps and gave us the story on how to find these tiger cages which were well hidden, and without the maps we would never have found them. Fortunately, I had a camera and a hidden tape recorder which proved useful when I returned to the United States.

Supporters of the war claim that the tiger cages were not at all that bad. But then Life magazine published my pic- tures, and the world saw the horrific conditions where, in clear violation of the Geneva code, North Vietnamese, Vietcong, as well as civilian opponents of the war—just civilians—who com- mitted no crimes whatsoever—were all crowded together in these cages, as I said, in clear violation of the Geneva Conventions and the most fundamental principles of international law.

At the same time, the U.S. Govern- ment had been insisting that the North Vietnamese abided by the Geneva Con- ventions in their treatment of pris- oners in North Vietnam. Yet here we were condoning and condoning the torture of civilian Vietnamese, along with Vietnamese soldiers and others in clear violation of the Geneva Conventions.

We may not have known about it—our public did not know about that—but the Vietnamese sure knew about it. I thought we had learned our lesson from that, and then I saw Abu Ghraib and thought: Wait a minute. Haven’t we learned our lesson? And, Mr. Presi- dent, looking back as 37 years, as I see the tiger cages were first talked about, they were denied—and they thought they could deny them because it was hard to get to the island. You couldn’t really get out there. As far as they were concerned, one had no pictures of it and no one had ever really escaped from there, like a Devil’s Island kind of place. So the military denied it. Our Government denied it year after year until I was able to take the pictures and bring back the evidence.

Mr. President, I submit to you and everyone here and the American people that had not that courageous soldier taken the pictures of Abu Ghraib and kept those pictures, they would have denied that ever happened. They would have denied to high Heaven that such things took place at Abu Ghraib.

Thankfully, one courageous young sol- dier decided this was wrong, it was in- humane, it was not upholding the high- est standards of America, and it was in violation of the Geneva Conven- tions. Had he not taken those pictures, it would be denied forever that ever happened at Abu Ghraib.

So now, as if we learned nothing from that previous tragedy of the tiger cages 36 years ago or Abu Ghraib just a couple of years ago, here we go again deny- ing obvious instances of torture and abuse, effectively giving the green light to torture by U.S. Government agents and contractors and watering down the War Crimes Act.

This is a betrayal of our laws. It is a betrayal of our values. It is a betrayal of everything that makes us unique and proud to be Americans.

In the administration, apparently thinks that we will just go along with this betrayal because there is an elec- tion in 6 weeks. Apparently they think we are afraid of being branded weak on terrorism. Indeed, some are no doubt hoping that they will lose against this bill and they can brand us as a bludgeon against us in the election. All I can say is: Shame on them. What is more, it is not going to work. Because opposing this bill, which would give the green light to torture, is far, far bigger than the outcome of the November election.

This is about preserving our core values as Americans. It is about standing up for our troops and ensuring that they do not become subject to the same acts of torture and retaliation. It is about standing up for American citizens, civilians, and others who may be caught up in some foreign land with false charges filed against them, and yet not even being able to contact our embassies or consulates to protect Americans. And it is about changing course and beginning to wage an effective war against the terrorists who attacked us on September 11, 2001.

It is time to quit being strong and wrong, and it is time to start being strong and smart. Being strong and wrong has been a disaster. It has bogged us down in a civil war in Iraq. It has turbocharged the terrorists. It has made America less safe. So it is time to be strong and smart. It is time to be true to who we are as Americans. It is time to say no to indefinite—incarceration. It is time to say no to taking away the right of someone put away to at least have the charges pressed against them. It is time to say no to torture in all its forms now and at any time in the future.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I want to start by complimenting Senators W ARNER, M CCAIN and GRAHAM and the work that they did to improve this bill, particularly in two areas.

First, our colleagues did the right thing by rejecting the attempt by the administration to reinterpret, by statute, Common Article III of the Geneva Conventions. That would have been an enormous mistake—and an invitation for other countries to define for themselves what the Geneva Conventions require.

Second, our colleagues were right to reject the use of secret evidence in military commissions. Such a proposal is not consistent with American jurisprudence, and would not have satisfied the requirements of the Supreme Court decision in Hamdan.

Overall, the bill provides a much better framework for trying unlawful enemy combatants than under the flawed order issued by the President. All this is positive, and our three colleagues deserve credit for their good work.

But the bill contains a significant flaw. It limits the right of habeas corpus in a manner that is probably unconstitutional. Don't take my word for it. Listen to the words of a conservative Republican, Kenneth Starr, who used to sit on this nation's second highest court, and is now one of the country's leading appellate advocates, in a letter written to Senator S PECTER earlier this week:

"Article 1, section 9, clause 2 of the United States Constitution provides that 'the privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it.' The United States is neither in a state of rebellion nor invasion. Consequently, it is inappropriate for Congress to modify the constitutionally protected writ of habeas corpus under current events.

"Accordingly, I believe this bill is likely unconstitutional. I hope that I am wrong. But I fear that I am right, and that we will be back here in a few years debating this issue again."

"We had one chance this right—"the opportunity that we don’t end up back here again after a new round of litigation. There was no reason to rush. No one challenges our right to detain the high-value prisoners the President just transferred to Guantanamo. We are not about to release them—nor should we.

"But rush we did. In the last week, there have been two different versions of the legislation that emerged from closed-door negotiations with the administration. Both versions may fail. I am not willing to trust the legal judgment and competence of this administration. But I am not.

"Since 9/11, several major cases have gone to the Supreme Court that relate to the laws governing the war on al-Qaida and the President's powers. And the administration has been wrong too many times—wrong about whether habeas corpus rights applied to detainees in Guantanamo Bay, wrong about whether U.S. citizens detained as enemy combatants had a right to meaningful due process, and wrong about whether the military commissions the President established by order were legal. Simply put, I am not willing to trust the administration's legal judgment again. And it is clear that the administration has put its imprint on this legislation in several troubling respects, including in the stripping of habeas rights.

"In the struggle in which we are engaged against radical fundamentalists, we must be both tough and smart. This bill is not smart because it risks continued litigation about how we detain and try unlawful enemy combatants.

"It is also not smart because it risks continued harm to the image of the United States. The 9/11 Commission concluded that "[a]llegations that the United States abused prisoners in its custody make it harder to build the diplomatic, political, and military alliances the government will need." The recently released National Intelligence Estimate concludes that there are several factors fueling the spread of the jihadist movement, including 'entrenched grievances, such as corruption, injustice, and fear of Western domination, leading to anger, humiliation and a sense of powerlessness.'

"The mistreatment of detainees at Abu Ghraib, and concerns about our policies governing detainees at Guantanamo Bay, undoubtedly fuel these grievances and anger against the United States. Our detainee policies have also made it harder for our allies to support our anti-terrorism policies. We have to get this right.

"Therefore, even though our colleagues achieved significant improvements, I cannot support this legislation.

Mr. W ARNER. Mr. President, at this point in time I yield to the distinguished Senator from Arizona 14 minutes.

I would say that I have been privileged to be a Member of this institution for now 28 years, and I first met JOHN M CCAIN when I was Secretary of the Navy. So that goes back 28 plus another 5 years that I have known of JOHN M CCAIN.

This Chamber, and indeed all of America, knows full well about the extraordinary record that this man has in the service of his Nation, showing selflessness, showing courage, showing foresight.

I am proud to have worked with him as a partner in these past weeks, indeed, months now, on this piece of legislation.

I just want to express my gratitude, and I think the gratitude of many people across this country, for the service he is rendering the Senate and hopefully will continue to render the Senate in the coming years.

When I step down under the caucus, in my hope that JOHN M CCAIN is elected to succeed me as chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

But at this point in time, I am proud to yield, as manager, my time to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield?

Mr. M CCAIN. I would be glad to.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I heartily join my good friend from Virginia in his assessment of Senator M CCAIN. I know there has been some disagreement as to who would go first, but that shouldn't in any way, I hope, cloud the real affection which I think everybody in this body holds for Senator M CCAIN and the effort he has made for so long to try to bring some kind of de-escalation to the approaches we use to people whom we detain.

I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona is recognized for 14 minutes.

Mr. M CCAIN. Mr. President, I thank both my friends of many years, Senator LEVIN and Senator W ARNER, for the collegiality, the bipartisanship, and the effort that we all make under the leadership of the Armed Services Committee for the betterment of the men and women who serve our country and our Nation’s defense. I am honored to serve under both.

For the record, I believe I just calculated that I say to my dear friend from Virginia, it has been 33 years since I came home from Vietnam and found that our distinguished Secretary of the Navy was very concerned about the welfare of those who had the lack of talent that we were able to get shot down. So I thank my friend from Virginia especially, and I thank my friend from Michigan. I believe our committee conducts itself in a fashion which has been handed down to us from other great Members of the Senate, such as Richard Russell and others.

Mr. President, before I move on to other issues, I have some criticism on the Senate floor today about the way in which the bill treats admissibility of coerced testimonies.

A New York Times editorial today said that in this legislation “coercion is defined in a way that exempts anything done before the passage of the 2005 Detainee Treatment Act, and anything else evidences ‘chooses’ in their own inimitable style. This is thoroughly incorrect, and I would like to correct not only the impression but the facts.

This bill excludes any evidence obtained through illegal interrogation techniques, including those prohibited by the 2005 Detainee Treatment Act. The goal is to bolster the Detainee Treatment Act by ensuring that the fruits of any illegal treatment will be per se inadmissible in the military commissions.

For evidence obtained before passage of the Detainee Treatment Act, we adopted the approach recommended by the military JAGs. In order to admit such evidence, the judge—we leave it to the judge—must find that: it passes the legal reliability test—and, as applied in practice, the greater the degree of coercion, the more likely the statement will not be admitted; the evidence possesses sufficient probative value; and that the military fairness would best be served by admission of the statement into evidence.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that three different letters from three different JAGs—Air Force, Navy, and Marine Corps—be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE AIR FORCE,
HEADQUARTER U.S. AIR FORCE,

Hon. JOHN MCCAIN,
Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: Thank you for your letter of 23 August 2006, in which you requested my written recommendations on the military commissions legislation Congress is expected to consider next month. You specifically ask for my personal views on the most pressing issues involving the legislation.

As of the date of this letter, several bills have been introduced and I believe the administration is also considering legislation for Congress. I appreciate the opportunity to provide my personal perspective and comments on the general nature of the potential legislation.

I begin with the premise that legislation is appropriate. As the Supreme Court noted again in Hamdan v. Rumsfeld, 548 U.S., 126 S.Ct. 2749 (2006), the President’s powers in wartime are at their greatest when specifically authorized by Congress. While different approaches are feasible, I believe the Nation will be best served by a fresh start to the military commissions.

Existing criminal justice systems, including the process established by Military Commission Order 1, should be reviewed to develop a system that will best serve the interests of justice and the United States. The Uniform Code of Military Justice (10 U.S.C. §801 et. seq.) (UCMJ) provided the basic processes and procedures that order could provide superb starting points. The processes and procedures in the UCMJ and MCM have served us well and can be readily adapted to meet the needs of military commissions.

As I have testified, Congress could enact a UCMJ Article 35a to establish the basic substantive requirements for military commissions. Article 35a would provide detailed guidance, just as the MCM provides detailed guidance for the trial of courts-martial. Alternatively, Congress could create a new chapter in Title 10, modeled to an appropriate degree after the UCMJ, and similarly leave the details to an executive order. Either approach must address the requirements of the Geneva Conventions and the concerns articulated in Hamdan.

There will necessarily be differences between current court-martial procedures and the rules and procedures for military commissions. However, the processes and procedures in the UCMJ are readily adapted to meet the needs of military commissions and still meet the requirements of criminal justice systems established by common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions. The legislation must appropriately address access to evidence and the accused’s presence during the trial. Specifically, it is my strong belief that evidence admitted against an accused and provided to members of a military commission must also be provided to the accused and accused’s counsel. Any statement evidence to be admitted outside the presence of the accused would mean the military commission could convict (and possibly impose a sentence of death) without the accused knowing the evidence considered against him. Thus, such a proceeding is fundamentally unfair.

Now is the time to correct that perception and clearly establish procedures and rules that meet that standard. These procedures and rules will do more than merely correct legal deficiencies; they will help reestablish the United States as the leading advocate of fair trials.

As the Supreme Court recently narrowed the application of residual hearsay as it applies to out-of-court statements that are testimonial in nature, such statements are now barred unless there is a showing that the witness is unavailable and the accused had a prior opportunity to cross-examine the witness. The overall application of the residual hearsay rule is functionally very much like that used in international tribunals and requires a military judge to find the evidence is both probative and reliable.

To the use of classified evidence, I believe the procedures of the MCM at Article 35(a) should be reviewed to develop a system that will best serve the interests of justice and the United States. Concerns about the admissibility of statements made by an accused primarily involve the current requirement to provide Miranda warnings conditioned on the accused waiving the right to representation. Concerns about the admissibility of state-
The military commission process must recog- nize the battlefield is not an orderly place. The requirement to warn an individual be- fore questioning is one area where deviation from the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ) framework may well be warranted.

Generally, if a military judge concludes the confession or admission of an accused is involuntary, the statement is not admissible in a court-martial over the accused’s objection. Commonly, a statement is involuntary if it is obtained in violation of the self-in- former is not cognizable. I believe military commissions should be set up in a way similar to the Court of Military Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit (consistent with the Detainee Treatment Act of 2005).

There is no consensus among military judges. Military commissions should not be permitted to consider evidence that is found to be unlawfully coerced and thus involuntary.

Finally, appellate jurisdiction over mili- tary commission decisions should be clearly established, and the appeals would be appropriately vested in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit (consistent with the Detainee Treatment Act of 2005).

I hope this information is helpful. Please let me know if additional information or comments from me on this matter are de- sired.

Sincerely,

Jack L. Rives,
Major General, USAF,
The Judge Advocate General.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL, WASHINGTON NAVY YARD,
Hon. John Mccain,
Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN. Thank you for your letter of August 23, 2006 requesting my personal views on military commission legis- lation.

Before proceeding with discussion of spe- cific issues, I would like to note that I have had the opportunity to provide comments to the DoD General Counsel and the Department of Justice regarding draft commission legislation. As of this writing, I have not seen a final version of the Administra- tion’s draft.

Although existing courts-martial rules are not practical for the prosecution of unlawful enemy combatants, they provide a good starting point for the drafting of Commis- sion legislation. I recommend that legisla- tion establish the jurisdiction of military commissions, set baseline standards of struc- ture, procedure, and evidence consistent with U.S. law and the law of war, and pre- scribe all evidentiary rules. It also would be most appropriate for the President to promulgate supplemental rules of practice. In this regard, I believe we should follow the military justice model whereby Congress establishes the legal framework (the Uniform Code of Mili- tary Justice, or in this case a Code for Mili- tary Commissions) and the President pro- mulgates the justiciable rules of practice (a Manual for Courts-Martial, or in this case a Manual for Military Commissions).

Within that context, I recommend that the jurisdiction of the military commissions be ex- panded to permit prosecution of all unlawful enemy combatants who engage in or attempt to engage in hostilities against the United States or its armed forces. We need the ability to prosecute before military commissions irregular belligerents who violate the laws of war while acting on behalf of foreign govern- ments as well as terrorists not associated with al Qaeda and/or the Taliban.

With regard to baseline standards of struc- ture, procedure, and evidence, it is critically important that independent military judges preside at military commissions and have authority to rule on all mat- ters of law. Similarly, defense counsel must have an independent reporting chain of com- mand, free from both actual and perceived influence of prosecution and convening au- thorities.

The introduction of evidence outside the presence of an accused is, in my view, incompat- ible with U.S. law and the law of war. The Supreme Court held in Handan v. Runsfeld, 126 S.Ct. 2749 (2006), that absent a sufficient practical need to deviate from existing U.S. law and humanitarian norms, any accused must be present at trial and have access to all evidence presented against him. A four-justice plurality also opined that Common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions requires, at a minimum, that an accused be present at trial and have access to the evidence.

I recommend that the legislation adopt Military Rule of Evidence 505 (M.R.E. 505), which is partly based on the Classified Infor- mation Procedures Act (CIPA). M.R.E. 505 permits a military judge to conduct an ex parte review of the Government’s interest in protecting classified information and encourages the submission of unclassi- fied summaries, or other forms of evidence in lieu of the classified information. This type of procedure ensures that classified information is not disclosed under cir- cumstances that could injure national security.

While it is true that application of a M.R.E. 505-style process might Justice Ken- nedy, who was not part of the plurality, fur- ther signaled in a separate concurring opin- ion that introduction of evidence outside the presence of an accused is troubling and, if done to the prejudice of the accused would be grounds for reversal. Furthermore, as a matter of policy, adopting such practice could have an influence on military strategy by encouraging others to reciprocate in kind against U.S. service members held in captivity.

I recommend that the legislation adopt a Military Rule of Evidence 505 (M.R.E. 505), which is partly based on the Classified Infor- mation Procedures Act (CIPA). M.R.E. 505 permits a military judge to conduct an ex parte review of the Government’s interest in protecting classified information and encourages the submission of unclassi- fied summaries, or other forms of evidence in lieu of the classified information. This type of procedure ensures that classified information is not disclosed under cir- cumstances that could injure national security.

With regard to hearsay evidence, I have no objection to the introduction of hearsay evi- dence so long as the evidentiary standard is clarified to exclude information that is unre- liable, not probative, unfairly prejudicial, confusing, or misleading, or when such ex- tension is necessary to protect the integrity of the proceedings. Such an approach would be consistent with the practice of interna- tional war crimes tribunals supported by the United States in Rwanda and the former Yugoslavia. These tribunals satisfy the re- quirements of the law of war including Com- mon Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions of 1949.

With regard to statements alleged to have been derived from coercion, the presiding military judge is vested with discretion and authority to inquire into the underlying factual circumstances and exclude any state- ment derived from coercion, in order to pro- tect the integrity of the process.

As I noted earlier, the legislation should enumerate all offenses triable by military commission. Conspiracy should be included, but only conspiracies to commit one of the substantive offenses specifically enumerated and there must be a requirement to prove the defendant’s awareness and intent in fur- therance of the conspiracy. This would mean, for example, that conspiracy to com- mit murder in violation of the laws of war must involve a premeditated intent to murder but affiliation with a terrorist organization, standing alone, would not be cognizable.

I also like to see the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States in Rwanda and the former Yugoslavia. These tribunals satisfy the re- quirements of the law of war including Com- mon Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions of 1949.

Thank you again for this opportunity to provide personal comment on military com- mission legislation. I hope that this informa- tion is helpful.

Sincerely,

Bruce MacDonald,
Rear Admiral, JAGC, U.S. Navy,
Judge Advocate General.

HEADQUARTERS U.S. MARINE CORPS,
Hon. John Mccain,
Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN. Thank you for your letter of August 23, 2006, in which you request written response to the service Judge Advocate General on the military commissions legislation Congress is expected to consider in September. You spe- cifically asked for comments on the most pressing issues involving the legisla- tion. I appreciate the opportunity to provide my personal perspective and comments.

Although I assumed the position of Staff Judge Advocate to the Commandant of the Marine Corps on 25 August, I am certainly familiar with the process to date, including the previous testimony of my predecessors, Brigadier General Kevin M. Sandikuler, and the Judge Advocates General. Like them, I believe that military commissions, in some form, are absolutely necessary in prosecuting alleged terrorists while con- tinuing to wage the Global War on Terror. I also believe that there is middle ground to be found between the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ) and the original military commissions process, which would comport with the requirements of Common Article 3 of the Geneva Convent.

Any legislation must be approached with an eye toward both precedent and reci- procity. We must account for the values for which our nation has always stood, and also be cognizant of the fact that the solution we create may influence how our service mem- bers conduct an interrogative procedure.

I share in the strong position previously expressed by the Judge Advocates General.
Regarding the fundamental importance of an accused’s access to evidence and presence at trial. Simply put, an accused (and his counsel) must be provided the evidence admitted against him. This may require the government to balance the need for prosecution on particular charges against the need to protect certain classified information. This balance must be struck on a case-by-case basis. Domestically, the government must often weigh the sanctity of sensitive information against having to disclose it for use in a successful prosecution. If such a case arises, the government should be permitted to consider evidence that is found to be unlawfully co-opted and thus involuntary.

And the other two Judge Advocate Generals say the same thing, that the provisions of this bill are exactly in line with their opinions. Frankly, that had a great deal of weight in our adopting them.

Almost exactly 3 months ago, the Supreme Court decided the groundbreaking case of Hamdan v. Rumsfeld. In that case, a majority of the Court ruled that the military procedures used to try detainees held at Guantanamo Bay fell short of the standards and other provisions of the Uniform Code of Military Justice and the Geneva Conventions.

The Court also determined that Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions applies to al-Qaida because our conflict with that terrorist organization is “not of an international character.” Some of my colleagues may disagree with the Court’s decision, but once issued it became the law of the land.

Regrettably, the residual hearsay exception found in the Military Rules of Evidence (MRE) provides a solid foundation upon which to build for the commissions to require that a military judge find the evidence to be probative and reliable—a standard with international acceptance. In practice, this standard could allow for alternatives to live testimony, such as by video teleconference, which take into account the global nature of the conflict.

I share previously expressed concerns about the admissibility of statements made by an accused as a product of torture or coercion. Without exception, statements obtained through torture, as defined in Title 18 of the U.S. Code, must be inadmissible. Coercion is a more nebulous concept. As a result, military judges should retain discretion to determine whether statements so alleged are admissible. After an examination of all the facts and circumstances surrounding the statement, the military judge could determine whether a statement was obtained because the individual is a war criminal or that the statement was not justified in any circumstance. Likewise, in my opinion, a military judge should be permitted to consider evidence that is found to be unlawfully co-opted and thus involuntary.

For the long term interest of the United States as a nation and for the safety of our own forces in battle, we should continue to maintain those principles. I continue to read and hear that we are facing a “different enemy” in the war on terror, but no matter how true that may be, inhumanity and cruelty are not new to warfare nor to enemies we have faced in the past. In my short 4 years in the Armed Forces, Americans confronted the horrors of the prison camps of the Japanese in World War II, the North Vietnamese in the long years of the Vietnam War, as well as knowledge of the Nazi’s holocaust depradations in World War II. Through those years, we have fought our own wars. We should continue to do so.

Thank you for your own personal courage in maintaining those values, both in war and in peace. I look forward to continued reports that the Congress is considering legislation which might relax the United States’ support for adherence to Common Article 3 of the Geneva Convention. It is true, it would seem to weaken the effect of the McCain Amendment on torture of last year. If such legislation is being considered, I fear that it may weaken America in two respects. First, it would establish a moral basis which has generally guided our conduct in war throughout our history. Second, it could give opponents a legal argument for mistreatment of Americans being held prisoner in time of war.

In 1950, 3 years after the creation of the Department of Defense, the then Secretary of Defense, General James Forrestal, issued a small book, titled The Armed Forces Officer. The book summarized the laws and traditions that governed our Armed Forces through the years. As the Senate deals with this issue, it might consider a short quote from the last chapter of that book which General Forrestal sent to every American Officer. The last chapter is titled, “Americans in Combat” and it lists 29 general propositions which govern the conduct of Americans in war. Number XV, which I long ago underlined in my copy, reads as follows:

“The United States abides by the laws of war. Its Armed Forces, in their dealing with all other peoples, are expected to comply with the laws of war, in the spirit and the letter. Beyond that, we do not hold harmless non-combatants, if it is within our power to avoid so doing. Wanton killing, torture, cruelty or the working of unusual hardship upon prisoners is not justified in any circumstance. Likewise, respect for the reign of law, as that term is understood in the United States, is expected to follow the flag wherever it goes.”

September 12, 2006.
Convention is in error, and if not that the Senate will reject any such proposal.

Very respectfully,

GENERAL JOHN W. VESSY, USA (Ret.)

SEPTEMBER 20, 2006

Hon. JOHN MCCAIN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: I have followed with great interest the debate over whether to redefine in law Common Article 3 of the Geneva Convention. I join my distinguished predecessors as Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Generals Vessey and Powell, in expressing concern regarding the contemplated changes to a critical part of the Geneva Convention. I believe, however, that it will be a grave mistake to do so.

Common Article 3 and associated Geneva provisions have offered legal protections to our troops since 1949. American soldiers are trained to Geneva standards and, in some cases, these standards constitute the only protections remaining after capture. Given our military’s extraordinary presence around the world, Geneva protections are critical.

Should the Congress redefine Common Article 3 in domestic statute, the United States would be inviting similar reciprocal action by other parties to the treaty. Such an action would send a terrible signal to other nations that the United States is attempting to water down its obligations under Geneva. At a time when we are deeply engaged in a war of ideas, the move away from Geneva, this would be an egregious mistake.

The legislation sponsored by Senator Warner, which would enumerate war crime offenses while remaining silent on America’s obligations under Geneva, is a better course of action. By doing so, our men and women in uniform will have the clarity they require, we can still interrogate terrorists, and our service personnel will have the undiluted protections offered by the Geneva Convention.

Respectfully,

GENERAL H. HUGH SHELTON

SENIOR McCAIN: This is the first time I have had a chance to discuss the administration policy regarding the war against terror but my professionalism and my conscience leads me to comment on the proposed interpretation/change’ to the Geneva Convention.

My concerns are as follows:

1. A redefinition or reinterpretation of the Geneva Convention, a document that has been taught to every recruit and officer candidate since its inception, would immediately attack the moral dimension with which every Soldier, Sailor, Marine and Airman is inculcated during their time as a member of the US Armed Forces. By weakening the moral link that these young men and women depend on, it would undermine a redefinition of a lawful Convention . . . we run the risk of undermining the foundation upon which they willingly fight and die for our Country.

2. The mothers and fathers who give their sons and daughters to our care brought their children up to do “right” to obey the law . . . to take the moral high ground. We do these parents a grave disservice by “legalizing” a different standard for their children.

3. To redefine what our men and women do to our servicemen and women when captured! This issue is all about how we, as Americans, act. Do we walk our talk. Do we change our game because our enemy acts in a horrific manner. Do we give up our honor because our enemy is without honor? If we do, we begin to mimic the very behavior we abhor.

4. Many countries already look at the United States as arrogant. This redefinition/ reinterpretation of the Geneva Convention to strengthen that conviction. The idea that the United States would “pick and choose” what portion of the Geneva Convention to follow (by allowing a redefinition/reinterpretation “redoing” . . . goes against who we are as a people and as a Nation. The unintended consequence of this type of action is that it opens the door for other nations to make interpretations of their own . . . across a gamut of issues. The world is a dangerous place and our actions might well serve as precedents during the first battle of the NEXT war.

5. Finally, Duty-Honor-Country and Semper Fidelis are NOT just “bumber stickers.” These words, and others like them, form the ethos of our Armed Forces. When you start to tamper with the laws governing warfare . . . laws recognized by countries around the world . . . you run the risk of bringing into question the very ethos that these men and women hold dear.

Semper Fidelis,

C.C. KRULAK,
General, USMC (Ret),
31st Commandant of the Marine Corps.

Mr. MCCAIN, These men express one common view: that modifying the Geneva Conventions is to redefine/reinterpret a terrible mistake and would put our personnel at greater risk in this war and the next. If America is seen to be doing anything other than upholding the letter and spirit of the conventions, it will be harder to defeat our enemies. I am pleased that this legislation before the Senate does not amend, redefine, or modify the Geneva Conventions in any way. The conventions are preserved intact.

The bill provides needed clarity for our personnel about what activities constitute war crimes. For the first time, there will be a list of nine specific activities that constitute criminal violations of Common Article 3, punishable by imprisonment or even death. There has been basic discussion about specific interrogation methods that may be prohibited. But it is unreasonable to suggest that any legislation could provide an explicit and all-inclusive list of what specific activities are illegal and which are permitted. Still, I am confident that the categories included in this section will criminalize certain interrogation techniques, like waterboarding and other techniques that cause serious pain or suffering that need not be prolonged. I emphasize “that need not be prolonged.”

Some critics of this legislation have asserted that it gives amnesty to U.S. personnel who may have committed war crimes contrary to the War Crimes Act. Nothing—nothing—could be further from the truth. As currently written, the War Crimes Act makes criminal any and all behavior that constitutes a violation of Common Article 3—specifically, any act that constitutes cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment or punishment. Therefore, if there is extrajudicial killing, IZARD—by law passed by Congress.

Simply put, this legislation ensures that we respect our obligations under Geneva, recognizes the President’s constitutional authority to interpret treaties, and brings increased transparency to the process of interpretation by ensuring that the Executive’s interpretation is made public—the Executive’s interpretation is made public. The legislation would also guarantee that Congress and the judicial branch will retain their traditional roles of oversight and review with respect to the President’s interpretation of nongrave breaches of Common Article 3.

In short, whereas last year only one law—the torture statute—was deemed to apply to the treatment of all enemy detainees, now there is a set of overlapping and comprehensive legal standards that are in force: the Detainee Treatment Act, with its prohibition on cruel, inhuman, and degrading treatment as defined by the fifth, eighth, and fourteenth amendments to the Constitution, Common Article 3 of the Geneva Convention to the War Crimes Act. This legislation will allow—my colleagues, have no doubt—this legislation will allow the CIA to continue interrogating prisoners within the boundaries established in the law.

Let me state this flatly: It was never our purpose to prevent the CIA from detaining and interrogating terrorists. On the contrary, it is important to the war on terror that the CIA have the ability to do so. At the same time, the CIA’s interrogation program has to abide by the rules, including the standards of the Detainee Treatment Act.
I, like many of my colleagues, find troubling the reports that our intelligence personnel feel compelled to purchase liability insurance because of the lack of legal clarity that exists in the wake of the Hamdan decision. This legislation provides an affirmation of defense—Government personnel prosecuted under the War Crimes Act for actions they reasonably believed to be legal at the time. That is a long-standing precedent. In addition, it would enable our private right of action against our personnel based on a violation of the Geneva Conventions. The intent of this provision is to protect officers, employees, members of the Armed Forces, and other agents of the United States from suits for money damages or any other lawsuits that could harm the financial well-being of our personnel who were engaged in lawful— I emphasize “lawful”—activities.

It is important to note, however, that the fact that the Geneva Conventions lack a private right of action—and the fact that this legislation does not create such a right—has absolutely no bearing on whether the Conventions are binding on the executive branch. Even if the Geneva Conventions do not enable us to sue our personnel for money damages, the President and his subordinates are nevertheless bound to comply with Geneva. That is clear to me and to all who have negotiated this legislation in good faith.

The Special Operations forces our personnel deserve not only the legal protections written into this legislation, but also the undiluted protections offered since 1949 by the Geneva Conventions. Should the United States be seen as amending, modifying, or redefining the Geneva Conventions, it would open the door for our adversaries to do the same, now and in the future. The United States should champion the Geneva Conventions, not look for ways to get them to serve our interests at the expense of our personnel deployed, in more places, than any other country in the world, and this unparalleled exposure only serves to further demonstrate the critical importance of our fulfilling the letter and the spirit of our international obligations. To do any differently would put our fighting men and women directly at risk. We owe it to our fighting men and women to uphold the Geneva Conventions, just as we have done for 57 years.

For these reasons, this bill marks a clear and consistent departure with the Detainee Treatment Act and the War Crimes Act, but with all of our obligations under Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions.

Finally, I note that there has been opposition to this legislation from some quarters, including the New York Times editorial page. Without getting into a point-by-point rebuttal here on the floor, I simply say that I have been reading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD trying to find the bill that page so vociferously denounced. The hyperbolic attack is aimed not at any bill this body is today debating, nor even at the administration’s original position. I could only infer that Congress simply ignore the Hamdan decision and pass no legislation at all. That, I suggest to my colleagues, would be a travesty.

This is a very long, difficult task. It is critical to restore security of this Nation, and we have done the very best we can. I believe we have come up with a good product. I believe good-faith negotiations have taken place. I hope we will pass this legislation very soon. I think you will find that people will be brought to justice and we can move forward with trials with treating people under the Geneva Conventions and restoring America’s prestige in the world.

I thank my colleagues.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, it is from strength that America should defend our values and Constitution. It takes a commitment to those values to demand accountability from the Government. In standing up for American values and security, I will vote against this bill.

I can give you many reasons, but let me take one. We will turn back the protections of the Great Writ of habeas corpus. Since 13th century Anglo jurisprudence, we have had the Great Writ. We have had habeas corpus since the birth of our Nation. We fought a revolution, fought to maintain it. We fought a civil war, and we fought through two world wars. Now, in a matter of hours, in a debate that has so often skirted the issues, we are ready to strip back habeas corpus. I cannot vote for that.

Senator SMITH spoke stirringly earlier today of the dangers of the bill’s habeas provision, which would eliminate the independent judicial check on Government overreaching and lawlessness. He quoted from great defenders of liberty. It was Justice Robert H. Jackson who said in his role as Chief Counsel for the Allied Powers responsible for trying German war criminals after World War II: ‘‘That four great nations, flushed with victory and stung with injury stand the hand of vengeance and voluntarily submit their captive enemies to the judgment of the law is one of the most significant tributes that Power ever has paid to Reason.’’

He closes the Nuremberg trials about which Senator Durbin spoke earlier by saying: ‘‘Of one thing we may be sure. The future will never have to ask, with misgiving, ‘What could the Nazis have done in their favor?’ History will know that whatever could be said, they were allowed to say. They have been given the kind of a trial which they, in the days of their pomp and power, never gave to any man. But fairness is not weakness. The extraordinary fairness of our judgments is an attribute of our strength.’’

He was right and his wisdom was echoed this week at our Judiciary Committee hearing when Admiral Harmon, the Commander Swift testified that fairness and lawfulness are our greatest strengths. This legislation doesn’t live up to that ideal. It strips away fairness.

The actions by the U.S. Government, this administration, for all its talk of strength, have made us less safe, and its current proposal is one that smacks of weakness and shivering fear. Its legislative demands reflect a cowing country that is succumbing to the threat of terrorism. I believe we Americans are bound to comply with Geneva. That is why we are stronger than that. I believe we are fairer than that. And I believe America should be a leader in the fight for human rights and the rule of law, and that will strengthen us in our fight against terrorists.

We have taken our eye off the ball in this fight against terrorists. That is essentially what all of our intelligence agencies concluded in the National Intelligence Estimate that the administration had for six months while this was rolling along, but that they only shared a part of this past weekend. Our retooled and reorganized intelligence agencies, with leadership handpicked by the administration, have concluded, contrary to the campaign rhetoric of the President and Vice President, that the Iraq war has become a ‘‘cause célebre’’ that has inspired a new generation of terrorists. It hasn’t stopped terrorists, it has inspired new terrorists.

The interrogation mistreatment of detainees at Guantanamo, at Abu Ghraib, at secret CIA prisons, and that by torturers in other countries to whom we have turned over people, have become other ‘‘causes célebre’’ and recruiting tools for our enemies.

Surely, the continued occupation of Iraq, when close to three-quarters of Iraqis want U.S. forces to depart their country, is another circumstance being exploited by enemies to demonize our great country.

Passing laws that remove the remaining checks against mistreatment of prisoners will not help us win the battle for the hearts and minds of the generation of young people around the world being recruited by Osama bin Laden and al-Qaida. Authorizing indefinite detention of anybody the Government designates, without any proceeding or without any recourse, putting them into the secret prisons we condemned during the Cold War, is a clear indication that the United States would do that. That is not what American values, our traditions, and our rule of law would have us do.

September 28, 2006
This is not just a bad bill, this is truly a dangerous bill. I have been asking Secretary Rumsfeld’s question for the last several weeks: whether our actions are eliminating more of our enemies than we are creating. But now we understand that we are creating more at risk than we are eliminating. Our intelligence agencies agree that the global jihadist movement is spreading and adapting; it is “increasing in both number and geographic dispersion.” We are paying the price more at risk.

“If this trend continues,” our intelligence agencies say, that is, if we do not wise up and change course and adopt a winning new strategy, “threats to U.S. interests at home and abroad will increase further in the days and months and years ahead. The intelligence agencies go on to note ominously that “new jihadist networks and cells, with anti-American agendas, are increasingly likely to increase further and, in turn, the operational threat will grow,” particularly abroad “but also in the homeland.”

This is truly chilling. The Bush-Cheeny administration not only failed to stop 9/11, but in the runup to another election and for the fundraising appeals to go out.

I had hoped that this time, for the first time, even though the Senate is controlled by the President’s party, we could act as an independent branch of the Government and serve as a check on this administration. After this debate and the rejection of all amendments intended to improve this measure, I see that day has long passed. I see it that way, too.

What is being lost in this debate is any notion of accountability and the guiding principles of American values and law. Where are the facts of what this administration euphemistically calls our war on terrorism, and against the law and on their own say-so, but now they are obtaining license—to engage in additional harsh techniques that the rest of the world will see as abusive, as cruel, as degrading, and even as torture. Fortunately, over the last 5 years we have grown, and one of our own people see it that way, too.

Secrecy for all time is to be the Republican rule of the day. Congressional oversight is no more. Checks and balances are no more. The fundamental check that was last provided by the Supreme Court is now to be taken away. This is wrong. This should be unconstitutional. It is certainly unconscionable. This is certainly not the action of any Senate in which I have served. It is not worthy of the United States of America. What we are saying is one person will make all of the rules; there will be no checks and balances. There will be no dissent, and there will be nobody’s view, and we will remove piece by piece, every single law that we have passed. It is not paid for by the American people who stood up several times on the floor today and voted to uphold the best of American values.

Going forward, the bill departs even more radically from our most fundamental principles. And provisions that were profoundly troubling a week ago when the Armed Services Committee marked up the bill have gotten much worse in the course of closed-door revisions over the past week. For example, the bill has been amended to eliminate habeas corpus review and to make it easier to deport from the United States people who have not been determined to be enemy combatants. It has moved from detention of those who are captured having taken up arms against the United States on a battlefield to millions of law-abiding Americans that the Government not just suspect of sympathies for Muslim causes and who knows what else—without any avenue for effective review.
Remember, we are giving a blank check to a Government whose incompetence was demonstrated in historic dimensions by the lack of preparation in response to Hurricane Katrina. This is the same Government which, in its fight for its life, has a former Secretary of Defense, Donald Rumsfeld, and a former Secretary of State, Colin Powell, on terrorist watch lists, and could not get them off. This is a Government which repeatedly releases confidential family information about our Armed Forces. It is a Govern- ment which just refuses to admit any mistakes or to make any corrections but regards all of its representatives, from Donald Rumsfeld to Michael Brown, as a success. This is a Government which has been holding for several years, and intends to hold indefinitely, without access or even to military tribunals, unless and until the Govern- ment determines that they are not enemy combatants—a term that the bill now defines in a tortured and unprecedentedly broad manner. And that power and any errors cannot be reviewed or corrected by a court. What message does that send about abuse of power? What message does that send to the world about America’s freedoms?

Numerous press accounts have quoted one fact-finder, a former CIA officer, who believe that a significant percentage of those detained at Guantanamo have no connection to terrorism. In other words, the Bush-Cheney administration has been holding for several years, and intends to hold indefinitely, without access or even to military tribunals, unless and until the Government determines that they are not enemy combatants—a term that the bill now defines in a tortured and unprecedentedly broad manner. And that power and any errors cannot be reviewed or corrected by a court. What message does that send about abuse of power? What message does that send to the world about America’s freedoms?

When the Senate accedes to that demand, it abandons American principles and all checks on an imperial Presi- dency. The Senator from Vermont will not be a party to retreat from America’s constitutional values. Vermonters don’t retreat.

Senator SMITH, speaking this morning about the habeas provisions of this bill, quoted Thomas Jefferson, who said:

The habeas corpus secures every man here, alien or citizen, against everything which is not law, whatever shape it may assume.

Jefferson said on another occasion:

I would rather be exposed to the inconveniences attendant on error than those attending too small a degree of it.

With this bill, the Senate reverses that profound judgment of history, chooses against liberty, and succumbs to fear.

When former Secretary of State Colin Powell wrote last week of his concerns with the administration’s bill, he wrote about doubts concerning our “moral authority in the war against terrorism.” This General, former head of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and former Secretary of State, was right. Now we have heard from a num- ber of current and former diplomats, military lawyers, Federal judges, law professors and school deans, the American Bar Association, and even the first President Bush’s Solicitor General, Kenneth Starr, that they have grave concerns with the habeas corpus stripping provisions of this bill.

I agree with Mr. Starr that we should not suspend—and we should certainly not eliminate—Writ. I also agree with more than 300 law profes- sors, who described an earlier, less ex- treme version of the habeas provisions of this bill as “unwise and contrary to the most fundamental precepts of our constitutional traditions.” And I agree with more than 30 former U.S. Ambassadors and other senior dip- lomats, who say that eliminating ha- beas corpus for aliens detained by the United States will harm our interests abroad, and put our own military, dip- lomatic, and other personnel stationed abroad at risk. We cannot spread a message of freedom abroad if our mes- sage to those who come to America is that they may be detained indefinitely without any recourse to justice.

In the wake of the attacks, and in the face of the continuing terrorist threat, now is not the time for the United States to abandon its prin- ciples. Admiral Hutson was right to point out that when we do, there would be little to distinguish America from a “banana republic” or the repressive re- gimes against which we are trying to rally the world and the human spirit. Now is not the time to abandon Amer- ican values, to shiver and quake, to rely on secondary torture. Those are ways of repression and oppression, not the American way.

We need to pursue the war on terror with strength and intelligence, but we need to uphold American ideals. The President says he wants clarity as to the meaning of the Geneva Conventions and the War Crimes Act. Of course, he did not want clarity when his administration was using its twisting, twisting interpretation of the law to author- ize torture and cruel and inhuman treatment. He did not want clarity when spying on Amer-icans without warrants. And he cer- tainly did not want clarity while keep- ing those rationales and programs se- cret from Congress. The administration does not seem to want clarity when it refuses even to tell Congress what its understanding of the law is following the withdrawal of a memo that said the President could authorize illu- minate torture. That memo was with- drawn because it could not withstand the light of day.

It seems the only clarity this admin- istration wants is a clear green light from Congress to do whatever it wants. That is not clarity. That is immunity from crime. I cannot vote for that. That is what the current legislation would give to the President on interro- gation techniques, on terrorism, and on diplomatic, and other personnel stationed abroad. It is a formula for immunity for those involved in conduct that is illegal. It is a Government which, in its fight for its life, has failed to do its job. The Senator from Vermont will not be a party to retreat from America’s constitutional values. Vermonters don’t retreat.

In reality, we already have clarity. Senior military officers tell us they know what the Geneva Conventions require, and the military trains its per- sonnel according to these standards. We have never had trouble urging other countries around the world to accept and enforce the provisions of the Gene- va Conventions. There was enough clarity there. That what the administra- tion appears to want, instead, is to use new legislative language to create loopholes and to narrow our obliga- tions not to engage in cruel, degrading, and inhuman treatment.

With this bill, the Senate reverses that profound judgment of history, chooses against liberty, and succumbs to fear.

This legislation throws the administration’s solution to all problems: more Presidential power. It allows the administration to promul- gate regulations about what conduct would and would not comport with the Geneva Conventions. There was enough clarity there. That what the administration appears to want, instead, is to use new legislative language to create loopholes and to narrow our obliga- tions not to engage in cruel, degrading, and inhuman treatment.

In the light of day, it seems the only clarity this admin- istration wants is a clear green light from Congress to do whatever it wants. That is not clarity. That is immunity from crime. I cannot vote for that. That is what the current legislation would give to the President on interro- gation techniques, on terrorism, and on diplomatic, and other personnel stationed abroad. It is a formula for immunity for those involved in conduct that is illegal. It is a Government whose incom- pentence was demonstrated in historic dimensions by the lack of preparation in response to Hurricane Katrina. This is the same Government which, in its fight for its life, has a former Secretary of Defense, Donald Rumsfeld, and a former Secretary of State, Colin Powell, on terrorist watch lists, and could not get them off. This is a Government which repeatedly releases confidential family information about our Armed Forces. It is a Govern- ment which just refuses to admit any mistakes or to make any corrections but regards all of its representatives, from Donald Rumsfeld to Michael Brown, as a success. This is a Government which has been holding for several years, and intends to hold indefinitely, without access or even to military tribunals, unless and until the Government determines that they are not enemy combatants—a term that the bill now defines in a tortured and unprecedentedly broad manner. And that power and any errors cannot be reviewed or corrected by a court. What message does that send about abuse of power? What message does that send to the world about America’s freedoms?
In 1996, working with the Department of Defense, Congress passed the War Crimes Act to provide criminal penalties for certain war crimes committed by and against Americans. The next year, again with the Pentagon’s support, Congress extended the War Crimes Act to violations of the basic line humanitarian protections afforded by Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions. Both measures were supported by a broad bipartisan consensus, and I was proud to sponsor the 1997 amendments.

The legislation was uncontroversial for a good reason. As I explained at the time, the purpose and effect of the War Crimes Act as amended was to provide for the implementation of America’s commitment to the basic international standards we subscribed to when we ratified the Geneva Conventions in 1955. Those standards are truly universal: They condemn war criminals whoever and wherever they are.

That is a critically important aspect of the Geneva Conventions and our own War Crimes Act. When we are dealing with fundamental norms that define the commitments of the civilized world, we cannot have one rule for us and one for them, however we define “us” and “them.” As Justice Jackson said at the Nuremberg tribunals, “We are not prepared to lay down a rule of criminal conduct against others which we would not be willing to have invaded against us.”

In that regard, I am disturbed that the legislation before us narrows the scope of the War Crimes Act to exclude certain violations of the Geneva Conventions and, perhaps more disturbingly, to retroactively immunize past violations. Neither the Congress nor the Department of Defense had any problem with the War Crimes Act when we were focused on using it to prosecute foreign perpetrators of war crimes. I am concerned that this is yet another example of this administration overruling the laws and our international obligations, and seeking to immunize others to break the law. It also could well prevent us from prosecuting rogues who we all agree were out of line, like the soldiers who mistreated prisoners at Abu Ghraib.

The President said on May 5, 2004 about prisoner mistreatment at Abu Ghraib:

I view those practices as abhorrent.

He continued:

But in a democracy, as well, those mistakes will be investigated, and people will be brought to justice.

The Republican leader of the Senate said on the same day:

I rise to express my shock and condemnation of these despicable acts. The persons who carried them must face justice.

Many of the tactics used in Abu Ghraib—the use of dogs, forced nudity, humiliation of various kinds—do not appear to be covered by the narrow definitions this legislation would graft into the War Crimes Act. Despite the President’s calls for clarity, the new provisions are so purposefully ambiguous that we cannot know for sure whether they are covered. If the Abu Ghraib abuses had come to light after the perpetrators left the military, they might never have been brought to justice under the administration’s formulation.

The President and the Congress should not be in the business of immunizing people who violate the law and make us less safe. If we lower our standards of domestic law to allow outrageous conduct, we can do nothing to stop other countries from doing the same. This change in our law does not prevent other countries from prosecuting our troops and personnel for violations of the Geneva Convention if they choose; it only changes our domestic law. But it could give other countries the green light to change their laws to allow them to treat our personnel in inhuman ways.

Let me be clear. There is no problem facing us about overzealous use of the War Crimes Act by prosecutors. In fact, as far as I can tell, the Ashcroft Justice Department and the Gonzales Justice Department have yet to file a single charge against anyone for a violation of the War Crimes Act. Not only have they never charged American personnel under the act, they have never used it to charge terrorists either.

This bill does not clarify the War Crimes Act. It authorizes and immunizes abhorrent conduct that violates our basic ideals. Perhaps that is why more than 40 religious organizations and human rights groups wrote to urge the Senate to take more time to consider the effects of this legislation on our safety, security, and commitment to the rule of law, and to vote against it if the serious problems in the bill are not corrected.

The purported legislation would also allow the admission of evidence obtained through cruel and inhuman treatment into military commission proceedings. This provision would once again allow this administration to avoid all accountability for its misguided policies which have contributed to the rise of a new generation of terrorists who threaten us. Not only would the military commissions legislation before us immunize those who violated international law and stomped on basic American values, but it would allow them then to use the evidence obtained in violation of basic principles of fairness and justice.

Allowing in this evidence would violate our basic standards of fairness without increasing our security. Maher Arar, the Canadian citizen arrested by our government on bad intelligence and sent to Syria to be tortured, confessed to attending terrorist training camps. A Canadian commission investigating these confessions had no basis in fact. They merely reflected that he was being tortured, and he told his torturers what they wanted to hear. It is only one of many such documented cases of bad information resulting from torture. We gain nothing from allowing such information.

The military commissions legislation departs in other unfortunate ways from the Warner-Levin bill. Early this week, apparently at the White House’s request, Republican drafters added a breathtakingly broad definition of “unlawful enemy combatant” which includes people—citizens and non-citizens alike—who have “purposefully and materially supported hostilities” against the United States or its allies. It also includes people determined to be unlawful enemy combatants by any “competent tribunal” established by the President or the Secretary of Defense. So the Government can select any person, including a United States citizen, whom it suspects of supporting hostilities—whatever that means—and begin denying that person the rights and processes guaranteed in our country. The implications are chilling.

I am sorry the Republican leadership passed up the chance to consider and pass bipartisan legislation that would have made us safer in the global war on terrorism both by giving us the tools we need and by showing the world the values we cherish and defend. I will not participate in a legislative retreat out of weakness that undermines everything this Nation stands for and that makes us more vulnerable and less secure.

The Senator from Vermont, consistent with my oath of office and my commitment to our armed forces, repeats a position that the President and the Congress also should have adopted: The Senate should pass this bipartisan bill. As I explained at the time it was approved by the Armed Services Committee on a bipartisan basis, the Senate is voting now on a dramatic change in our law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is 3½ minutes remaining.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, less than 2 weeks ago, the Armed Services Committee voted on a military commissions bill. The committee endorsed that bill on a bipartisan basis with a 15-to-9 vote. Yesterday, 43 of us voted for the same bill on the Senate floor.

The bill would have provided the administration with the tools that it needed to detain enemy combatants, conduct interrogations, and prosecute detainees for any war crimes they may have committed.

Unfortunately, that bill went off the tracks after it was approved by the Armed Services Committee. Instead of bringing to the Senate floor the bill that had been adopted by the Armed Services Committee on a bipartisan basis, we are voting now on a dramatically different bill based on changes made at the insistence of an administration that has been relentless in its determination to legitimize the abuse of detainees. This bill does not authorize the abuses, and to distort military commission procedures in order to ensure criminal convictions.
For example, the bill before us inexplicably fails to prohibit the use of statements or testimony obtained through cruel and inhuman treatment as long as those statements or testimony was obtained before December 30, 2005.

The argument has been made that the bill before us prohibits the use of statements that are obtained through torture. That was never in contention. The problem is that it permits the use of statements obtained through cruel and inhuman treatment that does not meet the strict definition of torture as long as those statements were obtained before December 30, 2005.

This is a compromise on the issue of cruelty—an issue on which there should be no compromise by our Nation or by the Senate. If we compromise on that, we compromise at our peril. The men and women who represent us in uniform will be in much greater danger if we compromise on the issue of statement obtained through cruelty and inhuman treatment.

A compromise on this issue endangers our troops because if other nations apply the same standard and allow statements or confessions obtained through torture to be used at so-called trials of our citizens, we will have little ground to stand on in our objecting to them.

This bill also does many other things which are dramatic changes from the bill that the Armed Services Committee. For instance, the bill would authorize the use of evidence seized without a search warrant or other authorization, even if that evidence was seized from U.S. citizens inside the United States in clear violation of the U.S. Constitution.

Both the committee bill and the bill before us provide the executive branch with the tools it needs to hold enemy combatants accountable for any war crimes they may have committed. On this issue we are in agreement. We all agree that people who are responsible for the terrible events of September 11 and other terrorist attacks around the world should be brought to justice.

However, the bill before us differs dramatically from the Senate Armed Services Committee bipartisan-approved bill, particularly when it comes to the accountability of the administration for policies and actions leading to the interrogation of detainees.

The bill before us contains provision after provision designed to ensure that the administration will not be held accountable for the abuse of prisoners in U.S. custody, for violations of U.S. law, or for the use of such tactics that have turned much of the world against us.

Over the last 2 days, we have debated the habeas corpus provision in the bill. Most of that debate has focused on the writ of habeas corpus as an individual right to challenge the lawfulness of detention. The writ of habeas corpus does serve that purpose.

But the writ of habeas corpus has always served as a means of making the sovereign account for its actions. By depriving detainees of the opportunity to demonstrate that they were detained in error, this bill denies them a critical right deeply embedded in American law. It also helps ensure that the administration will not be held to account for the illegal or abusive treatment of detainees.

Indeed, the court-stripping provision in the bill does far more than just eliminate habeas corpus rights for detainees. It also prohibits the U.S. courts from hearing or considering "any other action against the United States or its agents relating to any aspect of the detention, treatment, or trial" of an alien detainee. By depriving detainees of access to our courts, even if they have been subject to torture or to cruel and inhuman treatment, this provision seeks to ensure that the administration policies that appear to have violated our obligations under U.S. and international law will never be aired in court.

A number of other provisions in the bill before us appear to be directed at the same objective. For example, section 5 of the bill provides that no person—whether that person is an enemy combatant or anybody else—may invoke the Geneva Conventions as a source of rights in a habeas corpus or other proceeding in any court of the United States. Section 948(g) of the military commissions part of the bill would similarly provide that no person subject to trial by military commission may invoke the Geneva Conventions as a source of rights. These provisions, like the habeas corpus provision, appear to be designed to ensure that administration policies that may have violated our obligations under U.S. and international law will never be aired in court.

Other provisions in the bill narrow the range of abuses that are covered by the War Crimes Act. As a result of these amendments, some actions that were war crimes at the time they took place will not be prosecuteable. Indeed, because of a complex definition in the bill, some actions that violated the War Crimes Act at the time they took place and will violate that act if they take place in the future will not be prosecutable. In other words, this bill carves out a window to immunize actions of this administration from prosecution under the War Crimes Act.

The administration and its allies have argued that these provisions are necessary to protect CIA interrogators from prosecution for actions that they believed to be lawful and authorized at the time they were undertaken. However, we addressed that problem with the enactment of the Detainee Treatment Act. That law provides a defense to any U.S. agent who engaged in specific operational practices that were officially authorized or reasonably believed to be lawful at the time they were undertaken.

This bill, however, goes far beyond protecting the front line interrogators and agents who believed that their actions were lawful: it changes the law to ensure that the administration officials who provided the authorization and knew or should have known that there was no legal basis for that authorization, will not be held account-able for their actions.

Last year, this Congress took an important stand for the rule of law by enacting the McCain amendment, which prohibits the cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment of detainees in the custody of any U.S. citizen anywhere in the world. That landmark provision is at risk of being rendered meaningless, if we establish rules ensuring that it can never be enforced.

We need to provide the administration with the tools that are needed to prosecute unlawful enemy combatants for any war crimes that they may have committed. However, we should not do so in a way that is inconsistent with our values as a Nation. We need to practice what we preach to the rest of the world.

The bill before us will put our own troops who might be captured in future conflicts at risk if other countries decide to apply similar standards to us, is likely to result in the reversal of convictions on appeal, and is inconsistent with American values. For these reasons, I will vote no on final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, it is my understanding I am to speak and the majority leader will speak and then we will vote; is that true?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, on a bright and sunny September morning 5 years ago our Nation changed. Our Nation was attacked. Nearly 3,000 of our citizens were murdered, and our lives as we knew them were forever changed.

The family members of those who died that day and we, their fellow Americans, have been waiting 5 years for those who masterminded that outrageous terrorist attack to be brought to justice. Osama bin Laden, a man whom we have seen on videotape bragging and laughing about his role in conceiving this deed, remains at large 5 years later. The American people are justifiably frustrated that he has not been caught. They have a right to ask whether our military and intelligence resources were unwisely diverted from that solemn task.

But some of Osama bin Laden’s lieutenants were captured overseas years ago. There is no disagreement whatsoever between Republicans and Democrats on the need to bring these people to justice. We all want to make sure the President has the tools he needs to make this happen.

For 5 years, Democrats stood ready to work with the President and the Republican Congress to establish sound
The world is beginning to doubt the moral basis of our fight against terrorism. To redefine Common Article 3 would add to those doubts. Furthermore, it would put our own troops at risk. At the same time, the bill would deprive Federal judges of the power to review the legality of many such detentions. Judges—all judges—would have no power to review the legality of many such detentions. This is true even in the case of a lawful permanent resident arrested and held in the United States, and even if that person happens to be completely innocent.

The Framers of our Constitution understood the need for checks and balances. This is a fundamental principle right out the window.

Many of the worst provisions were not in the committee-reported bill and were not in the compromise announced last Friday. They were added over the weekend. Because there was a bill that was put before the Senate last Thursday, and from Thursday to Monday, it changed after, I say, back-room meetings with White House lawyers.

We have tried to improve this legislation. My friend, the ranking member of the Armed Services Committee, Senator CARL LEVIN, proposed to substitute the bipartisan bill reported by the Armed Services Committee. That amendment was rejected basically on a party-line vote.

Senators SPECTER and LEAHY, the two Members who are responsible for the Judiciary Committee, the chairman and ranking member, offered an amendment to restore the right of judicial review. That amendment was rejected on a party-line vote.

And Senator ROCKEFELLER, the ranking Democrat on the Intelligence Committee, offered an amendment to improve congressional oversight of the CIA programs. This amendment was rejected on a party-line vote.

Senator KENNEDY offered an amendment to clarify that inhumane interrogation tactics prohibited by the Army Field Manual could not be used on America's enemies. That amendment was rejected on a party-line vote.

Senator BYRD, who has seen things come and go in this body and who has been a Member of Congress for more than 50 years, offered an amendment to sunset military commissions so Congress would be required to reconsider this far-reaching authority after 5 years of having it in effect. That commonsense, realistic amendment was rejected on a party-line vote.

I personally believe, having been in a few courtrooms, that this legislation is unconstitutional. It will certainly be struck down by the Supreme Court in the years ahead, and when that happens, we will be back here debating how to bring terrorists to justice. The families of the 9/11 victims and the Nation have been waiting 5 years for the perpetrators of these attacks to be brought to justice. They should not have to wait longer. We should do this right now; we should do it right. We are not doing so by passing this bill.

The national security policies of this administration and this Republican Congress may have been tough, but they certainly haven't been smart. The American people are paying a tremendous price for their mistakes. History will judge our actions here today. I am convinced that future generations will view passage of this bill as a grave error. I will be recorded as voting against this piece of legislation.

Mr. President, I dislike, I find repulsive, and I do not condone these evil and horrible people, these terrorists. They should be brought before the bar of justice and given what they deserve. For 5 years, that has not been the case. We Democrats want terrorists brought to justice quickly and in a way in keeping with our Constitution and, in this case, give honor to the sacrifices made by American patriots in days past.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, for the past month we have debated how best to keep America safe. On one point I know all of our colleagues agree is that Khalid Sheikh Mohammed should be brought to justice and be prosecuted for masterminding the mass murders of almost 3,000 Americans on September 11. I know the American people and the families of those victims share that goal.

Every terrorist should be held accountable for their crimes against the innocent, against our enduring freedoms, against the values that we all share. Unfortunately, due to the Supreme Court’s decision in Hamdan v. Rumsfeld, prosecutions of suspected terrorists like Khalid Sheikh Mohammed are at a stand-still, and these prosecutions will remain at a stand-still until we act to authorize military commissions to try these suspected terrorists.

In addition to halting prosecutions of suspected terrorists, the Hamdan decision has undermined effective interrogation methods employed by our intelligence community. These methods yield critical information that allows us to prevent terrorist attacks and to save innocent lives. The information provided by these enemy combatants is our primary source—our best source—of critical intelligence.

Past interrogations have guided us to the precise location of terrorists in hiding, explained how al-Qaeda leaders communicate with operatives in Iraq, and identified voices in intercepted communications. Without this information, we fight a blind war.

The bill we will vote on in a few minutes addresses the concerns raised by... the Hamdan decision. It provides the legislative framework authorizing military tribunals to prosecute suspected terrorists. It ensures certain protections and rights for the accused such as the right to counsel and the right to exclude evidence obtained through torture.

At the same time, the bill recognizes that because we are at war with a different type of enemy, we should not try terrorist detainees in the same way as our uniformed military or civilian criminals.

The bill also protects classified information from terrorists who could exploit it to plan another terrorist attack.

Finally, the bill allows key intelligence programs to continue while ensuring that our detention and interrogation methods comply with both domestic and international laws, including Geneva Conventions Common Article 3.

The bottom line is the bill before us allows us to bring terrorists to justice through full and fair military trials while preserving intelligence programs—intelligence programs that have disrupted terrorist plots and saved countless American lives.

Our national security demands that we pass this bill tonight. We need this tool in the war on terror. In the 5 years since 9/11 we have not suffered another terrorist attack on U.S. soil. One reason we have remained safe is by staying on the offense against emerging threats. This bill is another offensive strike against terrorism.

For the safety and security of the American people, Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join us in supporting the Military Commission Act of 2006.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill, as amended, pass, as follows:

The bill (S. 3930), as amended, was passed, as follows:

I. DEFENSE—This chapter applies to military commissions established under title 10, United States Code, section 948a. military commission as provided in this chapter.

"(c) CONSTRUCTION OF PROVISIONS.—The procedures for military commissions set forth in this chapter are based upon the procedures for trial by general courts-martial under chapter 47 of this title (the Uniform Code of Military Justice). Chapter 47 of this title does not, by its terms, apply to trial by military commission except as specifically provided in this chapter. The judicial construction and application of that chapter are not binding on military commissions established under this chapter.

"(d) INAPPLICABILITY OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS.—The following provisions of this title shall not apply by reason of section 47 of this title (the Uniform Code of Military Justice), relating to speedy trial, including any rule of courts-martial relating to speedy trial.

"(B) Sections 31(a), (b), and (d) (articles 31(a), (b), and (d) of the Uniform Code of Military Justice), relating to compulsory self-incrimination.

"(C) Section 332 (article 32 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice), relating to pretrial investigation.

"(2) Other provisions of chapter 47 of this title shall apply to trial by military commission under this chapter, to the extent provided by this chapter.

"(e) TREATMENT OF RULINGS AND PRECEDENTS.—The findings, holdings, interpretations, and other precedents of military commissions under this chapter may not be introduced or considered in any hearing, trial, or other proceeding of a court-martial convened under this chapter.

"(f) STATUS OF COMMISSIONS UNDER COMMON ARTICLE 3.—A military commission established under this chapter is a regularly constituted court, and all the necessary ‘judicial guarantees which are recognized as indispensable by civilized peoples’ for purposes of common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions.

"(g) GENEVA CONVENTIONS NOT ESTABLISHING SOURCE OF RIGHTS.—No alien unlawful enemy combatant subject to trial by military commission under this chapter may invoke the Geneva Conventions as a source of rights.

"§ 948e. Persons subject to military commissions

"(a) JURISDICTION.—A military commission under this chapter shall have jurisdiction to try any offense made punishable by this chapter, or any other offense committed by an alien unlawful enemy combatant before, on, or after September 11, 2001.

"(b) LAWFUL ENEMY COMBATANTS.—Military commissions under this chapter shall not have jurisdiction over lawful enemy combatants. Lawful enemy combatants who violate or are subject to trial under chapter 47 of this title. Courts-martial established under that chapter shall have jurisdiction to try a lawful enemy combatant for any offense committed under this chapter.

"(c) DETERMINATION OF UNLAWFUL ENEMY COMBATANT STATUS DISPOSITIVE.—A finding, whether before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this chapter, that an individual is an unlawful enemy combatant is dispositive on the question of whether that individual is an unlawful enemy combatant under this chapter.

"§ 948f. Jurisdiction of military commissions

"(a) JURISDICTION.—A military commission under this chapter may be convened by the Secretary of Defense or by any officer or official of the United States designated by the Secretary for that purpose.

"(b) DEMAND FOR TRIAL.—In any case in which a demand for trial is presented to the convening authority, the convening authority may adjudge trial to be held by a military commission under this chapter if he is the accuser or a witness for the prosecution or has acted as an investigator or counsel in the same case.

"(c) EXCUSE OF MEMBERS.—Before a military commission under this chapter if he is the accuser or a witness for the prosecution or has acted as an investigator or counsel in the same case.
(c) Number of Members; excuse of member; and impaneling of members.

(a) Number of Members.—(1) A military commission under this chapter shall be composed of five members.

(b) Excuse of Members.—No member of a military commission under this chapter may be absent or excused after the military commission has been assembled for the trial of a case unless excused—

(1) as a result of a challenge;

(2) by the military judge for physical disability or other good cause; or

(3) by order of the convening authority for good cause.

(c) Absent and Additional Members.—Whenever a military commission under this chapter is reduced below the number of members required by subsection (a), the trial may not proceed unless the convening authority details new members sufficient to provide not less than such number. The trial may not proceed unless the new members, present after the record evidence has been read to the military commission in the presence of the military judge, the accused (except as provided in section 949d of this title), and counsel for both sides.

§ 948l. Detail or employment of reporters and interpreters.

(a) Court Reporters.—Under such regulations as the Secretary of Defense may prescribe, the convening authority of a military commission may detail to or employ for the commission qualified court reporters, who shall make a verbatim recording of the proceedings of and testimony taken before the commission.

(b) Interpreters.—(1) Under such regulations as the Secretary of Defense may prescribe, the convening authority of a military commission may detail to or employ for the commission qualified interpreters who shall interpret for the commission and, as necessary, for trial counsel and defense counsel and for the accused case.

(c) Transcript; Record.—The transcript of a military commission under this chapter shall be under the control of the convening authority and the commission, who shall also be responsible for preparing the record of the proceedings.

§ 948m. Number of members; excuse of member; and impaneling of members.

(a) Number of Members.—(1) A military commission under this chapter shall, except as provided in paragraph (2), have at least five members.

(2) In a case in which the accused before a military commission under this chapter may be sentenced to a penalty of death, the military commission shall have the number of members prescribed by section 948m(c) of this title.

(b) Excuse of Members.—No member of a military commission under this chapter may be absent or excused after the military commission has been assembled for the trial of a case unless excused—

(1) as a result of a challenge;

(2) by the military judge for physical disability or other good cause; or

(3) by order of the convening authority for good cause.

§ SUBCHAPTER III—PRE-TRIAL

PROCEDURE.

Sec. 949a. Rules.

§ 949a. Rules.

(a) Procedures and Rules of Evidence.—Pretrial, trial, and post-trial procedures, including elements and modes of proof, for cases triable by military commission under this chapter may be prescribed by the Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the Attorney General. Such procedures shall, so far as the Secretary considers practicable or consistent with military or intelligence activities, apply the principles of law and the rules of evidence in trial by general courts-martial. Such procedures and rules of evidence may not be contrary to or inconsistent with this chapter.

(b) Rules for Military Commission.—(1) Notwithstanding any departures from the law and the rules of evidence in trial by general courts-martial authorized by subsection (a), the procedures and rules of evidence in trials by military commission under this chapter shall include the following:

(A) The accused shall be permitted to present evidence in his defense, to cross-examine the witnesses who testify against him, and to examine and respond to evidence admitted against him on the issue of guilt or innocence and for sentencing, as provided for by this chapter.

(B) The accused shall be present at all sessions of the military commission (other than those for deliberations or voting), except when excluded under section 949d of this title.

(C) The accused shall receive the assistance of counsel as provided for by section 948k.

(D) The accused shall be permitted to represent himself, as provided for by paragraph (3).

(2) In establishing procedures and rules of evidence for military commission proceedings, the Secretary of Defense may prescribe the following provisions:

(A) Evidence shall be admissible if the military judge determines that the evidence would have probative value to a reasonable person.

(B) Evidence shall not be excluded from trial by military commission on the grounds that the evidence was not seized pursuant to a search warrant or other authorization.

(C) A statement of the accused that is otherwise admissible shall not be excluded from trial by military commission on grounds of alleged coercion or compulsory self-incrimination so long as the evidence complies with the provisions of section 949c of this title.

(D) Evidence shall be admitted as authentic so long as

(1) the military judge of the military commission determines that there is sufficient basis to find that the evidence is what it is claimed to be; and
“(ii) the military judge instructs the members that they may consider any issue as to authentication or identification of evidence in determining the weight, if any, to be given to the evidence;

“(ii) A hearing, evidence not otherwise admissible under the rules of evidence applicable in a trial by a court-martial, may be admitted in a trial by military commission if the proponent of the evidence makes known to the adverse party, sufficiently in advance to permit the adverse party with a fair opportunity to meet the evidence, the intention of the proponent to offer the evidence, and the particulars of the evidence (including information on the general circumstances under which the evidence was obtained). The disclosure of evidence under the preceding sentence is subject to the requirements and limitations applicable to the disclosure of classified information in section 949j(c) of this title.

“(iii) The military judge shall exclude any evidence the probative value of which is substantially outweighed—

“(3) The accused in a military commission under this chapter who exercises the right to self-representation under paragraph (1)(D) shall have the same right as counsel to—

“(A) inspect, copy, or review, unless classified, any document used in whole or in part for authenticating or identifying evidence; or “(B) be made a party to any proceeding in which the classification of any document is to be reviewed.

“§ 949c. Duties of trial counsel and defense counsel

“(a) The accused shall be represented in his defense before a military commission or any member thereof, in reaching the findings or sentence in any case;

“(B) The action of any convening, approving, or reviewing authority with respect to his judicial acts; or

“(C) the exercise of professional judgment by trial counsel or defense counsel.

“(3) Paragraphs (1) and (2) do not apply with respect to—

“(A) general instructional or informational courses in military justice if such courses are designed solely for the purpose of instructing members of a command in substantive and procedural aspects of military commissions; or

“(B) statements and instructions given in open proceedings by a military judge or counsel.

“(b) Prohibition on Consideration of Actions on Commission in Evaluation of P FITNESS.—In the preparation of an effectiveness, fitness, or efficiency report or any other report or document used in whole or in part for the purpose of determining whether a commissioned officer of the armed forces is qualified to be advanced in grade, or in determining the assignment or transfer of any such officer, no consideration should be retained on active duty, no person may—

“(1) consider or evaluate the performance of duty of any member of a military commission under this chapter; or

“(2) give a less favorable rating or evaluation to any commissioned officer because of the negative rating or evaluation given to the officer by the military judge or counsel, represented any accused before a military commission under this chapter.

“(c) Delegation of Authority to Prescribe Regulations.—The Secretary of Defense may delegate the authority of the Secretary to prescribe regulations under this chapter.

“(d) Notification to Congress.—The Secretary of Defense shall submit to the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate and the Committee on Armed Services of the House of Representatives a report describing the mobilization.

§ 949d. Sessions

“(a) Sessions Without Presence of Members.—(1) At any time after the service of charges upon which the accused has been arraigned by military commission under this chapter, the military judge may call the military commission to sit for the purpose of determining whether the members of the military commission are qualified to sit for the trial of the issues raised by a plea of not guilty;

“(B) hearing and ruling upon any matter which may be ruled upon by the military judge under this chapter, but not the matter is appropriate for later consideration or decision by the members;

“(C) if permitted by regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense, receiving the pleas of the accused; and

“(D) performing any other procedural function which may be performed by the military judge under this chapter or under rules prescribed pursuant to section 949a of this title and which does not require the presence of the members.

“(2) Except as provided in subsections (c) and (e), any proceedings under paragraph (1) shall—

“(f) Protection of Classified Information.—Except as provided in subsections (c) and (e), all proceedings of a military commission under this chapter, but only in accordance with this subsection.

“(g) The military judge may closely examine, or not appearing to the public or a portion of the proceedings under paragraph (1) only upon a finding by the military judge that the finding that such closure is necessary to—

“(A) protect information the disclosure of which could reasonably be expected to cause damage to the national security, including intelligence or law enforcement sources, methods, or activities; or

“(h) A finding under paragraph (1) may be based upon a presentation, including a pre-existing presentation of evidence by the court-martial.

“(C) Exclusion of Accused from Certain Proceedings.—The military judge may exclude the accused from a proceeding upon a determination that, after being warned by the military judge, the accused persists in conduct that justifies exclusion from the courtroom.

“(1) to ensure the physical safety of individuals; or

“(D) Protection of Classified Information.—(1) National Security Privilege.—(a) Classified information shall be protected and is privileged from disclosure if disclosure would be detrimental to the national security, the rule in this subsection applies to all stages of the proceedings of military commissions under this chapter.
“(B) The privilege referred to in subparagraph (A) may be claimed by the head of the executive or military department or government agency concerned based on a finding by the head of that department or agency that—

(i) the information is properly classified; and

(ii) disclosure of the information would be detrimental to the national security.

“(C) A person who may claim the privilege referred to in subparagraph (A) may authorize a representative, witness, or trial counsel to do so on his behalf. The authority of the representative, witness, or trial counsel to do so is presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary.

(2) INTRODUCTION OF CLASSIFIED INFORMATION.

(A) ALTERNATIVES TO DISCLOSURE.—To protect classified information from disclosure, the military judge, upon motion of trial counsel, shall authorize, to the extent practicable—

(i) the deletion of specified items of classified information from documents to be introduced as evidence before the military commissions;

(ii) the substitution of a portion or summary of the information for such classified documents; or

(iii) the substitution of a statement of relevant facts that the classified information would tend to prove.

(B) PROOTION OF SOURCES, METHODS, OR ACTIVITIES.—The military judge, upon motion of trial counsel, shall permit trial counsel to introduce otherwise admissible evidence before the military commission, while protecting from disclosure the sources, methods, or activities by which the United States acquired the evidence if the military judge finds that (i) the sources, methods, or activities by which the United States acquired the evidence are classified, and (ii) the evidence is reliable. The military judge may require trial counsel to present to the military commission and the defense, to the extent practicable and consistent with national security, an unclassified summary of the sources, methods, or activities by which the United States acquired the evidence.

(C) ASSERTION OF NATIONAL SECURITY PRIVILEGE AT TRIAL.—During the examination of any witness before a military commission, where classified information is relevant to any question, line of inquiry, or motion to admit evidence that would require the disclosure of classified information. Following such examination, the military judge shall take suitable action to safeguard such classified information. Such action may include the review of trial counsel’s claim of privilege by the military judge in camera and on an ex parte basis, and the delay of proceedings to permit trial counsel to consult with the department or agency concerned as to whether the national security privilege should be asserted.

(3) CONSIDERATION OF PRIVILEGE AND RELATED MATERIALS.—A claim of privilege under this subsection, and any materials submitted in support thereof, shall, upon request of the Government, be considered by the military judge in camera and on an ex parte basis.

(4) ADDITIONAL REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of Defense may prescribe additional regulations, consistent with this subsection, for the protection of classified information during proceedings of military commissions under this chapter. A report on any regulations so prescribed, or modified, shall be submitted to the President of the Senate and the House of Representatives not later than 60 days before the date on which such regulations or modifications, as the case may be, go into effect.

* § 949e. Continuance

“(A) The military judge or a military commission under this chapter may, for reasonable cause, grant a continuance to any party for such time, and as often, as may appear to be just.

* § 949f. Challenges

(A) CHALLENGES AUTHORIZED.—The military judge or a military commission under this chapter may be challenged by the accused or trial counsel for cause stated to the commission. The military judge shall determine the relevance and validity of challenges for cause. The military judge may receive a challenge to more than one person at a time. Challenges by trial counsel shall ordinarily be presented and decided before those by the accused are offered.

(B) PEREMPTORY CHALLENGES.—Each accused and the trial counsel are entitled to one peremptory challenge. The military judge may not be challenged except for cause.

(C) CHALLENGES AGAINST ADDITIONAL MEMBERS.—Whenever additional members are detailed to a military commission under this chapter, the military judge or a military commission under this chapter may require trial counsel to present to the military judge in camera and shall not decide on the basis of information—

(iii) the substitution of a statement of relevant facts that the classified information would tend to prove.

* § 949g. Oaths

(A) IN GENERAL.—(1) Before performing their respective duties in a military commission under this chapter, military judges, members, trial counsel, defense counsel, reporters, and interpreters shall take an oath to perform their duties faithfully.

(B) The form of oath required by paragraph (1), the time and place of the taking thereof, the manner of recording the same, and whether the oath shall be taken for all cases in which duties are to be performed or for a particular case, shall be as prescribed in regulations of the Secretary of Defense. Those regulations may provide that—

(A) an oath to perform faithfully duties as a military judge, trial counsel, or defense counsel may be taken at any time by any judge advocate or other person certified to be qualified for such duty; and

(B) if such an oath is taken, such oath shall not be taken again at the time the judge advocate or other person is detailed to that duty.

(B) WITNESSES.—Each witness before a military commission under this chapter shall be examined on oath.

* § 949h. Former jeopardy

(A) IN GENERAL.—No person may, without his consent, be tried by a military commission under this chapter a second time for the same offense.

(B) SCOPE OF TRIAL.—No proceeding in which the accused has been found guilty by a military commission under this chapter upon any charge or specification is a trial in the sense of this section until the finding of guilty has become final after review of the case has been fully completed.

* § 949i. Pleas of the accused

(A) ENTRY OF PLEA OF NOT GUILTY.—If an accused in a military commission under this chapter after a plea of guilty set up matter inconsistent with the plea, or if it appears that the plea of guilty was made through lack of understanding of its meaning and effect, or if the accused fails or refuses to plead, a plea of not guilty shall be entered against the accused. Such a motion to correct the plea of guilty will be granted if the military commission shall proceed as though the accused had pleaded not guilty.

(b) FINDING OF GUILT AFTER GUILTY PLEA.—With respect to any charge or specification to which a plea of guilty has been made by the accused in a military commission under this chapter and accepted by the military judge, a finding of guilty of the charge or specification may be entered immediately without a vote. The finding shall constitute a finding of fact unless the plea of guilty is withdrawn prior to announcement of the sentence, in which event the proceedings shall continue as if the plea of guilty had not been entered.

* § 949j. Opportunity to obtain witnesses and other evidence

(A) RIGHT OF DEFENSE COUNSEL.—Defense counsel in a military commission under this chapter shall have the same opportunity to obtain witnesses and other evidence as provided in regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense.

(B) PROCESS FOR COMPULSION.—Process issued in a military commission under this chapter to compel witnesses to appear and testify and to compel the production of other evidence—

(1) shall be similar to that which courts of the United States having criminal jurisdiction may lawfully issue; and

(2) shall run to any place where the United States shall have jurisdiction.

(C) PROTECTION OF CLASSIFIED INFORMATION.—With respect to discovery obligations of trial counsel under this section, the military judge, upon motion of trial counsel, shall authorize, to the extent practicable,

(A) the deletion of specified items of classified information from documents to be made available to the accused;

(B) the substitution of a portion or summary of the information for such classified documents; or

(C) the substitution of a statement of relevant facts that the classified information would tend to prove.

* § 949l. The military judge, upon motion of trial counsel, shall authorize trial counsel, in the course of complying with discovery obligations under this section, to protect from disclosure the sources, methods, or activities by which the United States acquired such evidence.

(2) The military judge may require trial counsel to present, to the extent practicable, an unclassified summary of the sources, methods, or activities by which the United States acquired such evidence are classified. The military judge may require trial counsel to present, to the extent practicable, an unclassified summary of the sources, methods, or activities by which the United States acquired such evidence.

* § 949m. Prosecution of exculpatory evidence

(1) As soon as practicable, trial counsel shall disclose to the defense the existence of any evidence known to trial counsel that reasonably tends to exculpate the accused. Where exculpatory evidence is classified, the accused shall be provided with an adequate substitute in accordance with the procedures under subsection (c).

(2) In this subsection, the term ‘evidence known to trial counsel’, in the case of exculpatory evidence, means exculpatory evidence that the prosecution would be required to disclose in a trial by general court-martial under chapter 47 of this title.

* § 949n. Defense of lack of mental responsibility

(A) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense in a trial by military commission under this chapter that, at the time of the commission of the acts constituting the offense, the accused, as a result of a severe mental disease or defect, was unable to appreciate the nature and quality or the wrongfulness of the acts of which the accused is accused.

(B) DETERMINATION OF THE QUESTION OF THE ABSENCE OR PRESENCE OF A MENTAL DISEASE OR DEFECT.—If the question of the absence or presence of a mental disease or defect does not otherwise constitute a defense, it is an affirmative defense in a trial by military commission under this chapter that, at the time of the commission of the acts constituting the offense, the accused, as a result of a severe mental disease or defect, was unable to appreciate the nature and quality or the wrongfulness of the acts of which the accused is accused.
"(b) BURDEN OF PROOF.—The accused in a military commission under this chapter has the burden of proving the defense of lack of mental responsibility by clear and convincing evidence, and the convening authority shall charge them to find the accused—

(1) guilty;
(2) guilty by reason of lack of mental responsibility; or
(3) subject to subsection (d), not guilty by reason of lack of mental responsibility.

(d) DEFENSE NOT REQUIRED FOR FINDING.—The accused shall be found not guilty by reason of lack of mental responsibility under subsection (c)(3) only if a majority of the members present at the time the vote is taken determines that the defense of lack of mental responsibility has been established.

§ 9491. Voting and rulings

(a) VOTE BY SECRET WRITTEN BALLOT.—Voting by secret written ballot of a military commission under this chapter on the findings and on the sentence shall be by secret written ballot.

(b) RULINGS.—(1) The military judge in a military commission under this chapter shall rule upon all questions of law, including the admissibility of evidence and all interlocutory questions arising during the proceedings.

(2) Any ruling made by the military judge upon a question of law or an interlocutory question (other than the factual issue of mental responsibility of the accused) is conclusive and constitutes the ruling of the military commission. However, a military judge may change his ruling at any time during the trial.

(c) INSTRUCTIONS PRIOR TO VOTE.—Before a vote is taken of the findings of a military commission under this chapter, the military judge shall, in the presence of the accused and counsel, instruct the members as to the elements of the offense and charge the members—

(1) that the accused must be presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by evidence and all interlocutory questions arising during the proceedings beyond a reasonable doubt;

(2) that in the case being considered, if there is no reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused, the doubt must be resolved in favor of the accused and he must be acquitted;

(3) that, if there is reasonable doubt as to the degree of guilt, the finding must be in a lower degree as to which there is no reasonable doubt; and

(4) that the burden of proof to establish the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt is upon the United States.

§ 9491m. Number of votes required

(a) CONVICTION.—No person may be convicted by a military commission under this chapter of any offense, except as provided in section 9491(b) of this title or by concurrence of two-thirds of the members present at the time the vote is taken.

(b) SENTENCES.—(1) No person may be sentenced to death by a military commission under this chapter by reason of any of the armed forces; or

(2) in any other offense or correctional institution under the control of the United States or its allies, which the United States may be allowed to use.

(b) TREATMENT DURING CONFINEMENT BY OTHER THAN THE ARMED FORCES.—Persons confined under subsection (a)(2) in a penal or correctional institution not under the control of an armed force are subject to the same discipline and treatment as persons confined or committed by the courts of the United States or of the State, District of Columbia, or place in which the institution is situated.

§ 950a. Error of law; lesser included offense

(a) ERROR OF LAW.—A finding or sentence of a military commission under this chapter is not subject to review for an error of law unless the error materially prejudices the substantial rights of the accused.

(b) LESSER INCLUDED OFFENSE.—Any reviewing authority with the power to approve or affirm a finding of guilty by a military commission under this chapter may approve or affirm, instead, so much of the finding as includes a lesser included offense.

§ 950b. Review by the convening authority

(a) NOTICE TO CONVENCING AUTHORITY OF FINDINGS AND SENTENCE.—The findings and sentence of a military commission under this chapter shall be reported in writing promptly to the convening authority after the announcement of the sentence.

(b) SUBMITTAL OF MATTERS BY ACCUSED TO CONVENCING AUTHORITY.—(1) The accused may submit to the convening authority matters for consideration by the convening authority with respect to the findings and the sentence of the military commission under this chapter.

(2) (A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), a submittal under paragraph (1) shall be made in writing within 20 days after the accused has been given an authenticated record of the findings and sentence of the military commission under this chapter.

(B) If the accused shows that additional time is required for the accused to make a use of irons, single or double, except for the purpose of safe custody, is prohibited under this chapter.

§ 949t. Maximum limits

"The punishment which a military commission may direct for an offense may not exceed such limits as the President or Secretary of Defense may prescribe for that offense.

§ 949u. Execution of confinement

(a) IN GENERAL.—Under such regulations as the Secretary of Defense may prescribe, a sentence of confinement adjudged by a military commission under this chapter may be carried into execution—

(1) in any place of confinement under the control of any of the armed forces; or

(2) in any penal or correctional institution under the control of the United States or its allies, which the United States may be allowed to use.

(b) TREATMENT DURING CONFINEMENT BY OTHER THAN THE ARMED FORCES.—Persons confined under subsection (a)(2) in a penal or correctional institution not under the control of an armed force are subject to the same discipline and treatment as persons confined or committed by the courts of the United States or of the State, District of Columbia, or place in which the institution is situated.

not order a rehearing, the convening authority shall dismiss the charges. A rehearing as to the findings may not be ordered by the convening authority when there is a lack of substantial prejudice to the defense in the record to support the findings. A rehearing as to the sentence may be ordered by the convening authority if the convening authority disapproves the sentence.

(1) AUTOMATIC REFERRAL FOR APPELLATE REVIEW.—Except as provided under subparagraph (B), a proceeding in revision may be ordered if the sentence as approved under section 950b of this title exceeds 10 years or if the convening authority disapproves the findings. A rehearing as to the sentence may not be ordered by the convening authority if the convening authority disapproves the sentence.

(2) A rehearing may be ordered by the convening authority if the convening authority disapproves the findings and sentence and does not order a rehearing, the convening authority shall dismiss the charges. A rehearing as to the findings may not be ordered by the convening authority when there is a lack of substantial prejudice to the defense in the record to support the findings. A rehearing as to the sentence may be ordered by the convening authority if the convening authority disapproves the sentence.

(3) A rehearing may be ordered by the convening authority if the convening authority disapproves the findings or sentence that charge, which sufficiently alleges a violation; or

(iii) increase the severity of the sentence unless the sentence prescribed for the offense is mandatory under this subsection (b).

(3) A rehearing may be ordered by the convening authority if the convening authority disapproves the findings and sentence and does not order a rehearing, the convening authority shall dismiss the charges. A rehearing as to the findings may not be ordered by the convening authority when there is a lack of substantial prejudice to the defense in the record to support the findings. A rehearing as to the sentence may be ordered by the convening authority if the convening authority disapproves the sentence.

(4) The convening authority shall serve on the accused or on defense counsel notice of any action taken by the convening authority under this subsection.

(5) ORDER OF REVISION OR REHEARING.—(1) Subject to subparagraphs (2) and (3), the convening authority of a military commission under this chapter may, in his sole discretion, order a proceeding in revision or a rehearing.

(B) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), a proceeding in revision may be ordered by the convening authority if the convening authority disapproves the findings or sentence that charge, which sufficiently alleges a violation; or

(ii) the record shows improper or inconsistent action by the military commission with respect to the findings or sentence that can be rectified without material prejudice to the substantial rights of the accused.

(B) EXCLUSIVE APPELLATE JURISDICTION.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), in a trial by military commission under this chapter, the convening authority may appeal to the Court of Military Commission Review any order or ruling of the military judge that—

(B) NOTICE OF APPEAL.—The United States shall take an appeal of an order or ruling under subsection (a) by notice of appeal with the military judge within five days after the date of such order or ruling.

(C) APPEAL.—An appeal under this section shall be heard within 90 days after service of the notice of appeal. The Court may act only with respect to matters of law.

(D) APPEAL FROM ADVERSE RULING.—The United States may appeal an adverse ruling of the military judge. The United States may file a petition for review in the Court of Appeals within 10 days after the date of such ruling. Review under this subsection shall be at the discretion of the Court of Appeals.

(E) APPEAL FROM REHEARING.—(1) Upon a rehearing, the convening authority may—

(A) COMPOSITION OF MILITARY COMMISSION FOR REHEARING.—Each rehearing under this chapter shall take place before a military commission composed of members who were not members of the military commission which first heard the case.

(B) SCOPe OF REHEARING.—(1) Upon a rehearing, the convening authority may—

(A) dismiss any charge or specification by setting aside a finding of guilty thereto; or

(B) change a finding of guilty to a charge to a finding of guilty to an offense that is a lesser included offense of the offense stated in the charge.

(C) CASES TO BE REVIEWED.—The Court of Military Commission Review shall be composed of not less than three appellate military judges. For the purpose of reviewing military commission decisions under this chapter, the court may sit in panels or as a whole in accordance with rules prescribed by the Secretary.

§ 950d. Appeal by United States

(1) INTERLOCUTORY APPEAL.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), in a trial by military commission under this chapter, the convening authority may appeal to the Court of Military Commission Review any order or ruling of the military judge that—

(A) terminates proceedings of the military commission with respect to a charge or specification;

(B) excludes evidence that is substantial proof of a fact material in the proceeding; or

(C) relates to a matter under subsection (d), (e), or (f) of section 949d of this title or section 949e(c) of this title.

(2) The United States may not appeal under paragraph (1) an order or ruling that is, or amounts to, a finding of not guilty by the military commission with respect to a charge or specification.

(B) NOTICE OF APPEAL.—The United States shall take an appeal of an order or ruling under subsection (a) by notice of appeal with the military judge within five days after the date of such order or ruling.

(C) APPEAL.—An appeal under this section shall be heard within 90 days after service of the notice of appeal. The Court may act only with respect to matters of law.

(D) APPEAL FROM ADVERSE RULING.—The United States may appeal an adverse ruling of the military judge. The United States may file a petition for review in the Court of Appeals within 10 days after the date of such ruling. Review under this subsection shall be at the discretion of the Court of Appeals.

(F) APPEAL FROM REHEARING.—(1) Upon a rehearing, the convening authority may—

(A) dismiss any charge or specification by setting aside a finding of guilty thereto; or

(B) change a finding of guilty to a charge to a finding of guilty to an offense that is a lesser included offense of the offense stated in the charge.

(C) CASES TO BE REVIEWED.—The Court of Military Commission Review shall be composed of not less than three appellate military judges. For the purpose of reviewing military commission decisions under this chapter, the court may sit in panels or as a whole in accordance with rules prescribed by the Secretary.

§ 950e. Rehearings

(1) The accused may waive his right to a rehearing, the convening authority may—

(A) dismiss any charge or specification by setting aside a finding of guilty thereto; or

(B) change a finding of guilty to a charge to a finding of guilty to an offense that is a lesser included offense of the offense stated in the charge.

(ii) the sentence prescribed for the offense is mandatory.

(2) Upon a rehearing, if the sentence approved after the first military commission was in accordance with a pretrial agreement, the accused may withdraw his plea with respect to the charges or specifications upon which the pretrial agreement was based, or otherwise does not comply with the pretrial agreement. Those charges or specifications may include any punishment not in excess of that lawfully adjudged at the first military commission.

§ 950f. Review by Court of Military Commission Review

(1) The accused may waive his right to a rehearing, the convening authority may—

(A) dismiss any charge or specification by setting aside a finding of guilty thereto; or

(B) change a finding of guilty to a charge to a finding of guilty to an offense that is a lesser included offense of the offense stated in the charge.

(2) Subject to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense, action on the sentence under this paragraph may be taken only after consideration of any matters submitted in accordance with subsection (b) or after the time for submitting such matters expires, whichever is earlier.

(C) In taking action under this paragraph, the convening authority may, in his sole discretion, approve, disapprove, commute, or suspend the sentence in whole or in part. The convening authority may not increase a sentence.

(D) ORDER OF REVISION OR REHEARING.—(1) Subject to subparagraphs (2) and (3), the convening authority of a military commission under this chapter may, in his sole discretion, order a proceeding in revision or a rehearing.

(2) A rehearing may be ordered by the convening authority if the convening authority disapproves the findings and sentence that charge, which sufficiently alleges a violation; or

(i) the sentence is based upon a finding of guilty of an offense not considered upon the merits in the original proceedings; or

(ii) the sentence prescribed for the offense is mandatory.

(3) Upon a rehearing, if the sentence approved after the first military commission was in accordance with a pretrial agreement, the accused may withdraw his plea with respect to the charges or specifications upon which the pretrial agreement was based, or otherwise does not comply with the pretrial agreement. Those charges or specifications may include any punishment not in excess of that lawfully adjudged at the first military commission.
"(a) Appointment.—The Secretary of Defense shall, by regulation, establish procedures for the appointment of appellate counsel for the United States under this chapter who—

(b) Representation of United States.—Appellate counsel appointed under subsection (a) shall represent the United States in any appeal or review proceeding under this chapter before the Court of Military Commission Review;

(c) Representation of Accused.—The accused shall be represented by appellate counsel appointed under subsection (a) before the Court of Military Commission Review, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, and the Supreme Court, and by civilian counsel if retained by the accused. Any such civilian counsel shall meet the qualifications for counsel appearing before military commissions under this chapter.

(d) Finality or proceedings, findings, and sentences.—

(1) Finality.—The appellate review of records of trials provided by this chapter, and the proceedings, findings, and sentences of military commissions reviewed by the Court of Military Commission Review, is final. The appellate review is subject to review by the Supreme Court, and by civilian counsel if retained by the accused. Any such civilian counsel shall meet the qualifications for counsel appearing before military commissions under this chapter and shall be subject to the requirements of paragraph (4) of that section.

§ 950i. Execution of sentence: procedures for execution of sentence of death

(a) In General.—The Secretary of Defense is authorized to carry out a sentence imposed by a military commission under this chapter in accordance with such procedures as may prescribe.

(b) Execution of Sentence of Death Only Upon Approval by the President.—If the sentence of a military commission under this chapter extends to death, that part of the sentence providing for death may not be executed until approved by the President. In such a case, the President may commute, remit, or suspend the sentence, or any part thereof, as he sees fit.

(c) Execution of Sentence of Death Only Upon Final Judgment of Legality of Proceedings.—(1) If the sentence of a military commission under this chapter extends to death, the sentence may not be executed until after a final judgment as to the legality of the proceedings (and with respect to death, approval under subsection (b)).

(2) Causation of death by lethal proceedings is final for purposes of paragraph (1) when—

(A) the time for the accused to file a petition for review by the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit has expired and the accused has not filed a timely petition for such a review or such petition was not otherwise under review by that Court; or

(B) review is completed in accordance with the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit and—

(i) a petition for a writ of certiorari is not timely filed;

(ii) such a petition is denied by the Supreme Court; or

(iii) review is otherwise completed in accordance with the judgment of the Supreme Court.

(d) Suspension of Sentence.—The Secretary of the Defense, or the convening authority in the case (other than the Secretary), may suspend the execution of any sentence or part thereof in the case, except a sentence of death.

§ 950j. Finality or proceedings, findings, and sentences.—(a) Finality.—The appellate review of records of trials provided by this chapter, and the proceedings, findings, and sentences of military commissions reviewed by the Court of Military Commission Review, is final. The appellate review is subject to review by the Supreme Court, and by civilian counsel if retained by the accused. Any such civilian counsel shall meet the qualifications for counsel appearing before military commissions under this chapter and shall be subject to the requirements of paragraph (4) of that section.

§ 950k. Statement of substantive offenses

(a) Purpose.—The provisions of this subchapter codify offenses that have traditionally been triable by military commissions. This chapter does not establish new crimes that did not exist before its enactment. Rather, it codifies those crimes for trial by military commission.

(b) Definition.—Because the provisions of this subchapter (including provisions that incorporate definitions in other provisions of law) are declarative of existing law, they do not preclude trial for crimes that occurred before the date of the enactment of this chapter.

§ 950l. Principals

Any person is punishable as a principal under this chapter if—

(1) commits an offense punishable by this chapter, or aids, abets, counsels, commands, or procures its commission; or

(2) causation of death by lethal proceedings is done which if directly performed by him would be punishable by this chapter; or

(3) is a superior commander who, with regard to acts punishable under this chapter, knew, had reason to know, or should have known, that a subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and who failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof.

§ 950m. Accessory after the fact

Any person subject to this chapter who, knowing that an offense punishable by this chapter has been committed, receives, comfor- ts, or assists the offender in order to prevent his apprehension, trial, or punishment shall be punished as a military commission under this chapter may direct.

§ 950n. Conviction of lesser included offense

An accused may be found guilty of an offense necessarily included in the offense charged or of an attempt to commit either the offense charged or an offense necessarily included therein.

§ 950o. Attempts

(a) In General.—Any person subject to this chapter who attempts to commit any offense punishable by this chapter shall be punished as a military commission under this chapter may direct, if the attempt is proved in fact, or is otherwise under review by that Court; or

(b) Scope of offense.—An act, done with specific intent to commit an offense under this chapter, amounting to more than mere preparation and tenders, even though fail- ing, to effect its commission, is an attempt to commit that offense.

(c) Effect of conviction.—Any person subject to this chapter may be convicted of an attempt to commit an offense although it appears on the trial that the offense was consummated.

§ 950p. Solicitation

Any person subject to this chapter who solicits or advises another or others to commit one or more substantive offenses triable by military commission under this chapter shall, if the offense solicited or advised is attempted or committed, be punished with the punishment provided for the commission of the offense, but, if the offense solicited or advised is not committed or attempted, he shall be punished as a military commission under this chapter may direct.

"(14) DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY IN VIOLATION OF THE LAW OF WAR.—Any person subject to this chapter who intentionally destroys property belonging to another person in violation of the law of war shall be punished as a military commission under this chapter may direct.

"(15) USING PROTECTED PERSONS AS A SHIELD.—Any person subject to this chapter who, by threat or intimidation of, a protected person with the intent to shield, favor, or impede military operations, shall be punished, if death results to one or more of the victims, by death or such other punishment as a military commission under this chapter may direct, and, if death does not result to any of the victims, by such punishment, other than death, as a military commission under this chapter may direct.

"(16) MURDER IN VIOLATION OF THE LAW OF WAR.—Any person subject to this chapter who intentionally kills one or more persons, including lawful combatants, in violation of the law of war shall be punished as a military commission under this chapter may direct.

"(17) USING TREACHERY OR PREFERY.—Any person subject to this chapter who, after incurring the confidence or belief of one or more persons that they were entitled to, or obliged to accord, protection under the law of war, intentionally makes use of that confidence or belief in killing, wounding, or otherwise subjecting to great risk of death, injury, or detention, such person or persons shall be punished, if death results to one or more of the victims, by death or such other punishment as a military commission under this chapter may direct, and, if death does not result to any of the victims, by such punishment, other than death, as a military commission under this chapter may direct.

"(18) IMPROPERLY USING A FLAG OF TRUCE.—Any person subject to this chapter who uses a flag of truce to feign an intention to negotiate in good faith, or who uses a flag of truce to conduct or surrender, in violation of the law of war, when there is no such intention shall be punished as a military commission under this chapter may direct.

"(19) USING A DISTINCTIVE EMBLEM.—Any person subject to this chapter who intentionally uses a distinctive emblem recognized by the law of war for combatant purposes in a manner prohibited by the law of war shall be punished as a military commission under this chapter may direct.

(21) RAPE.—Any person subject to this chapter who intentionally misreats the body of a dead person, without justification by legitimate need or necessity, shall be punished as a military commission under this chapter may direct.

(22) SEXUAL ASSAULT OR ABUSE.—Any person subject to this chapter who forcibly or with coercion or threat of force engages in sexual contact with one or more persons, causes one or more persons to engage in sexual contact, shall be punished as a military commission under this chapter may direct.

(23) TERRORISM.—Any person subject to this chapter who intentionally kills or inflicts serious bodily injury on one or more protected persons, or intentionally engages in an act that evinces a wanton disregard for human life, in a manner calculated to influence or affect the conduct of government or civilian population by intimidation or coercion, or to retaliate against government conduct, shall be punished, if death results to one or more of the victims, by death or such other punishment as a military commission under this chapter may direct, and, if death does not result to any of the victims, by such punishment, other than death, as a military commission under this chapter may direct.

(24) PROVIDING MATERIAL SUPPORT FOR TERRORISM.—(A) OFFENSE.—Any person subject to this chapter who provides material support or resources, knowing or intending that they are to be used to commit, or in furtherance of, or in carrying out, an act of terrorism (as set forth in paragraph (24)), or who intentionally provides material support or resources to an international organization engaged in hostilities against the United States, knowing that such organization has engaged or engages in terrorism (as so set forth), shall be punished as a military commission under this chapter may direct.

(B) MATERIAL SUPPORT OR RESOURCES DEFINED.—In this paragraph, the term ‘material support or resources’ has the meaning given that term in section 2339A(b) of title 18.

(25) SPYING.—Any person subject to this chapter who, in breach of an allegiance or duty to the United States or to the advantage of a foreign power, collects or attempts to collect information by clandestine means or while acting under false pretenses, for the purpose of conveying such information to an enemy of the United States, or one of the co-belligerents of the enemy, shall be punished by death or such other punishment as a military commission under this chapter may direct.

(26) CONSPIRACY.—Any person subject to this chapter who conspires to commit one or more substantive offenses triable by military commission under this chapter, and who knowingly does any overt act to effect the object of the conspiracy, shall be punished, if death results to one or more of the victims, by death or such other punishment as a court-martial or military commission may direct, and, if death does not result to any of the victims, by such punishment, other than death, as a military commission under this chapter may direct.

SEC. 5. TREATY OBLIGATIONS NOT ESTABLISHING GROUNDS FOR CERTAIN CLAIMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—No person may invoke the Geneva Conventions or any protocols thereto in any habeas corpus or other civil action or proceeding to which the United States, or a current or former officer, employee, member of the Armed Forces, or other agent of the United States is a party as a source of rights in any court of the United States or its States or territories.

(b) GENEA CONVENTIONS DEFINED.—In this section, the term ‘Geneva Conventions’ means—

(1) the Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of Wounded and Sick in Armed Forces in the Field, done at Geneva August 12, 1949 (6 UST 3316); and

(2) the Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded, Sick, and Shipwrecked Members of the Armed Forces at Sea, done at Geneva August 12, 1949 (6 UST 3217).

(3) the Convention Relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, done at Geneva August 12, 1949 (6 UST 3316); and

(4) the Convention Relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, done at Geneva August 12, 1949 (6 UST 3516).

SEC. 6. IMPLEMENTATION OF TREATY OBLIGATIONS.

(a) IMPLEMENTATION OF TREATY OBLIGATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The acts enumerated subsection (c) of section 2441 of title 18, United States Code, as added by subsection (2) of section 6(a)(11) of the Third Geneva Convention for the United States to interpret the meaning of any of the Geneva Conventions or any protocols of the Geneva Conventions, constitute violations of common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions prohibited by United States law.

(b) PROHIBITION ON GRAVE BREACHES.—The provisions of section 2441 of title 18, United States Code, as amended by this section, fully satisfy the obligation under Article 129 of the Third Geneva Convention for the United States to provide effective penal sanctions for grave breaches which are encompassed in common Article 3 in the context of an armed conflict not of an international character. No foreign or international source of law shall supply a basis for an appeal of decision in the courts of the United States or in interpreting the prohibitions enumerated in subsection (d) of such section 2441.

(c) DELEGATION TO THE PRESIDENT.—

(A) AS PROVIDED BY THE CONSTITUTION AND BY THIS SECTION, THE PRESIDENT HAS THE AUTHORITY FOR THE UNITED STATES TO INTERPRET THE MEANING OF ANY OF THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND TO PROMULGATE HIGHER STANDARDS AND ADMINISTRATIVE REGULATIONS FOR VIOLATIONS OF TREATY OBLIGATIONS WHICH ARE NOT GRAVE BREACHES OF THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS.

(B) THE PRESIDENT SHALL ISSUE INTERPRETATIONS DESCRIBED IN PARAGRAPH (A) BY EXECUTIVE ORDER PUBLISHED IN THE FEDERAL REGISTER AS A REASON TO PENALTY.

(C) ANY EXECUTIVE ORDER PUBLISHED UNDER THIS PARAGRAPH SHALL BE AUTHORITATIVE (EXCEPT as to grave breaches of common Article 3 as a matter of United States law, in the same manner as other administrative regulations.

(D) Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect the constitutional functions and responsibilities of Congress and the judicial branch of the United States.

(4) DEFINITIONS.—In this subsection:

(A) ‘CONVENTION’—The term ‘Geneva Conventions’ means—

(i) the Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of Wounded and Sick in Armed Forces in the Field, done at Geneva August 12, 1949 (6 UST 3217);

(ii) the Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of Wounded, Sick, and Shipwrecked Members of the Armed Forces at Sea, done at Geneva August 12, 1949 (6 UST 3217);

(iii) the Convention Relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, done at Geneva August 12, 1949 (6 UST 3316); and

(iv) the Convention Relative to the Protection of the Wounded Armistice POWs, done at Geneva August 12, 1949 (6 UST 3316).

(B) Third Geneva Convention.—The term ‘Third Geneva Convention’ means the international convention referred to in subparagraph (A)(iii).

(c) Revision to War Crimes Offense Under Federal Criminal Code.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 2441 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(A) in subsection (c), by striking paragraph (3) and inserting the following new paragraph (3):

‘‘(3) which constitutes a grave breach of common Article 3 (as defined in subsection (d)) when committed in the context of and in connection with the conduct of an armed conflict not of an international character; or’’; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

‘‘(d) COMMON ARTICLE 3 VIOLATIONS.—

‘‘(1) PROHIBITED CONDUCT.—In subsection (c)(3) of the United States Convention referred to in paragraph (1)(B) in accordance with the meaning given that term in section 2340(2) of this title;

‘‘(2) RETROACTIVE APPLICABILITY.—The term ‘grave breach of common Article 3’ means any conduct constituting a grave breach of common Article 3 of the international conventions done at Geneva August 12, 1949, as follows:

(A) TORTURE.—The act of a person who commits, or conspires or attempts to commit, an act specifically intended to inflict severe pain or suffering (other than pain or suffering incidental to lawful sanctions) upon another person within his custody or physical control for the purpose of obtaining information, or for a confirmation, punishment, intimidation, coercion, or any reason based on discrimination of any kind.

(B) CRUEL OR INHUMAN TREATMENT.—The act of a person who commits, or conspires or attempts to commit, an act intended to inflict severe or serious physical or mental pain or suffering (other than pain or suffering incidental to lawful sanctions) upon another person within his custody or physical control for the purpose of obtaining information, or for a confirmation, punishment, intimidation, coercion, or any reason based on discrimination of any kind.

(C) CRUEL OR INJURIOUS TREATMENT.—The act of a person who commits, or conspires or attempts to commit, an act intended to inflict severe or serious physical or mental pain or suffering (other than pain or suffering incidental to lawful sanctions) upon another person within his custody or physical control for the purpose of obtaining information, or for a confirmation, punishment, intimidation, coercion, or any reason based on discrimination of any kind.

(D) MURDER.—The act of a person who intentionally kills, or conspires or attempts to kill, or kills whether intentionally or unintentionally in the course of committing any other offense under this subsection, one or more persons for the purpose of committing the offenses, including those placed out of combat by sickness, wounds, detention, or any other cause, by disfiguring the person or persons or by mutilating them or by permanently disabling any member, limb, or organ of his body, without any legitimate medical or dental purpose.

SECURE FENCE ACT OF 2006— Resumed

CLOTURE MOTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLEN). Under the previous order, pursuant to rule XXII, the Chair lays before the Senate the pending cloture motion, which the clerk will state.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, do hereby move for a cloture on Calendar No. 615, H.R. 6061, a bill to establish operational control over the international land and maritime borders of the United States.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I support cloture on H.R. 6061, the Secure Fence Act. The sooner the Congress passes this bill, the sooner the Congress can put aside the misguided amnesty legislation passed by the Senate earlier this year. The American people have listened and rejected the call to offer U.S. citizenship to illegal aliens. They have said NO to amnesty! Hallelujah!

Comprehensive immigration reform is a euphemism for amnesty, and I oppose it absolutely and unequivocally. I voted against the amnesty bill passed by the Senate, and I will continue to vote against amnesty as long as I am in the Senate.

I have seen how amnesties encourage illegal immigration, with the amnesties of the 1980s and 1990s corresponding with an unprecedented rise in the population of unlawful aliens. I have seen how amnesties open the border to terrorists, with the perpetrators of terrorist plots against our country taking advantage of amnesties to circumvent the regular border and immigration checks.

I have seen how amnesties afford special rules to some immigrants. Amnesty undermines that great and egalitarian American promise that the rules will be applied equally and fairly to everyone.

We are a nation of immigrants to be sure, but that does not mean that we are obligated to give away U.S. citizenship. According to immigration experts, until the Congress never granted amnesty to any generation of immigrants. The Congress encouraged immigrants to learn the Constitutional principles of our Government and the history of our country. Immigrants learned English, and tried to assimilate. U.S. citizenship was their reward. The Congress did not reward illegal aliens with U.S. citizenship.

Now that this idea of amnesty has been rejected by the Congress, perhaps the administration will begin, at long last, to actually reducing the number of illegal aliens already in the country. Such an effort will require a significant investment of funds to hire law enforcement and border security agents, and to give them the resources and equipment they need to do their job. In the years immediately after the September 11 attacks, those funds had not only been left out of the President’s annual budgets but had been continuously blocked by the White House in the appropriations process. I and others tried to add funds where possible, but not until recently did the administration begin to recognize the inadequacies along the border. So much more is required and needs to be done.

The bill before the Senate today is a good bill. It would authorize two-layer fencing along the southern border where our security is weakest, and set timetables to which the Congress can hold the administration. But this bill will amount to little or no protection without the resources to implement it. The administration must do more. It must commit funding, and a committed effort to prevent illegal immigration, the protective barrier called for in this bill will amount to nothing more than a line drawn in the sands of porous Southern border.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, now we have 4 minutes that can be equally divided between those in favor and those in opposition; am I correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Let us review where we in the Senate have been on the issue of immigration. May, we passed by 63 votes, with 1 favorable vote missing, a comprehensive measure to try to deal with a complex and difficult issue. The House of Representatives passed this bill, but they refused to meet with the Senate of the United States. The House of Representatives held 60 hearings all over the country at taxpayers’ expense—millions and millions of dollars. What do they come up with? After all the pounding and finger-pointing, they came up with an 800-mile fence. Listen to Governor Napolitano: You show me a 50-foot fence, and I will show you a 51-foot ladder.

This is a feel-good bumper-sticker vote. It is not going to work. Why? Because half of all the undocumented come here legally. They don’t come over the fence.

Do you hear us? This is going to cost $9 billion.

Listen to what Secretary Chertoff said about this issue. Secretary Chertoff said: ‘‘Don’t give us old fences. Give us 20th century solutions.’’ Tom Ridge, the former head of Homeland Security, said the same thing.

So what is it all about? Let us do what we should have done in the first place. Let us sit down with the House, the way this institution is supposed to work, rather than just take what is served up by the House of Representatives that said take it or leave it. That is what they are saying to the Senate.

We have had a good debate which resulted in a comprehensive measure. Let
