GONZALEZ V. CARHART

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, yesterday was a good day for democracy. It was a great day for American constitutionalism. I have said it before, I will continue to say it. All too often, we see judicial decisions on America’s most important social issues made without any constitutional warrant.

Too difficult to convince your community that it should not pray before football games? No problem. Just find a judge to say that the practice is unconstitutional.

Americans of all political stripes understand that this highjacking of social policy from the people’s representatives deeply matters. A good number of law professors, law students, judges, and politicians still continue to inject the judicial branch
