Passions run high on this issue—very high. But there is new reason this week to believe a bipartisan consensus in Iraq is emerging. It is what the American people want. A recent poll—indeed, it was from a couple days ago—showed 52 percent of Americans favor benchmarks for immediate withdrawal from Iraq. There is a timetable for reducing combat forces. It is what President Bush’s own military advisers say we need, including General Petraeus, who has said this war cannot be won militarily. It is what the American people have stood for, with firm resolve throughout these entire negotiations.

Now, in the last few days, we have seen our Republican colleagues move closer to our position. Over the weekend, the House majority leader, John Boehner, said:

By the time we get to September or October, members are going to want to know how well this is working, and if it isn’t, what’s Plan B?

That is a timetable. The President has objected to our timetables. He vetoed our bill with timetables in it. The Republican leader in the House—the No. 1 Republican in the House—has told the President if things are not OK in September or October, something else has to happen. That is a timetable.

Senator Lott said:

This fall we have to see some significant changes on the ground.

And days ago, Leader McConnell echoed sentiments as well.

Meanwhile, on Wednesday a broad coalition of Republican House Members expressed their dissent directly to the President. They went to the White House, spent an hour and 15 minutes with the President. One of them, Tom Davis of Virginia, called it their chance to confront a President who, as he put it, is in a bubble.

In the spirit of bipartisanship, I am inclined to agree with that assessment. The President is in a bubble. He is isolated.

Every day, the ranks of dissatisfied Republicans grow. But I wish my Republican colleagues—who now agree that President Bush’s open-ended commitment has failed—would put some teeth behind their views.

We have courageous American troops in harm’s way every day. We lost another Nevadan this week. There may be a State that has lost more than the Presiding Officer’s State, but I do not know that State that would be. The State of Ohio has suffered significantly in the loss of life.

It is time for action. It is time to change course. It is long past due.

But I would say the shift we are hearing from the Republicans, even though a little bit quiet, each day is getting louder and louder. It is a welcome shift, and it is very encouraging. It gives me hope that in the coming days, weeks, and months we will have the work together with good faith and bipartisanship to give our troops and all Americans the new course they demand and deserve and the opportunity for our troops to come home.

We are going to do our very best to come up with something we can pass here in the Senate, send to the House, and confer, have a conference. We will do that to the very best of our ability. But, as I indicated earlier, it is not going to be easy.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The Acting President pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order of the day be dispensed with and that a quorum call be rescinded.

The Acting President pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

The Acting President pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each.

The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized.

POLITICIZATION OF THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Mr. President, competence, independence, and sound judgment are the lodestar of the administration of justice in this country. Unfortunately, over the past few months, I and many Americans have been forced to question on all three counts those whom this President has appointed to lead the Department of Justice. Indeed, with each passing day, we sense more and more that something is gravely wrong.

For example, we have learned about the misuse of the Department’s power to issue national security letters under the PATRIOT Act—which, even under the most legitimate and benign circumstances, represents a truly imposing authority. As you know, a national security letter, or NSL, is a Government demand for private information, issued without a warrant to third parties such as banks, phone companies, and Internet service providers. In March, the Department of Justice’s inspector general reported that NSLs are “misused.” Among other things, there were no clear guidelines for issuing national security letters. They were issued without proper authorization, there was sloppy recordkeeping by the FBI, and there was no independent, and so pungent, a citizen’s private information if the investigation was closed.

We have also, of course, learned about the unprecedented firings of eight U.S. attorneys—dismissals which seem to have been motivated by politics, rather than by incompetence, or, more likely, both.

The details of the Department’s misjudgments in this matter, and particularly the degree to which partisan politics has infiltrated this Department, become more numerous and more damaging to the Attorney General’s credibility every day. But the politicization of the Department should not come as a surprise, for we expected how the rules governing initial contacts between the White House and the Department of Justice on non-national security-related investigations and cases—traditional criminal cases—have changed since President Bush took office.

During previous administrations, there were strict rules governing contacts between the White House and the Department of Justice on investigations and cases—and for good reason. A strong firewall is necessary to prevent undue and untoward efforts to inject politics into the administration of justice. During the Clinton administration, this firewall was articulated in a September 1994 letter from Attorney General Janet Reno to White House Counsel Lloyd Cutler. It is my understanding that credit goes to Senator Hatch, then chairman of the Judiciary Committee, for his interest in seeing that policy continue in this way. So this has been a continuing and bipartisan concern, this question of the firewall between the White House and the Department of Justice.

That policy is represented by this chart. On the White House side, the only people authorized to have these initial discussions on criminal cases are the President, Vice President, Deputy White House Counsel, and the White House Counsel. Within the Department of Justice, it is only the Attorney General, Deputy Attorney General, and the Associate Attorney General—a grand total of seven people.

As I noted during the Attorney General’s testimony before the Judiciary Committee last month, that rule was changed in an April 2002 memo from Attorney General Ashcroft. The new policy permits initial communications between the White House and the Justice Department regarding any pending Department investigation or criminal or civil case should involve only the White House counsel, the President, or the President or Vice President, and the Attorney General or Deputy or Associate Attorney General.

That policy is represented by this chart. On the White House side, the only people authorized to have these initial discussions on criminal cases are the President, Vice President, Deputy White House Counsel, and the White House Counsel. Within the Department of Justice, it is only the Attorney General, Deputy Attorney General, and the Associate Attorney General—a grand total of seven people.

As I noted during the Attorney General’s testimony before the Judiciary Committee last month, that rule was changed in an April 2002 memo from Attorney General Ashcroft. The new policy permits initial communications between the White House and the Justice Department regarding any pending Department investigation or criminal or civil case should involve only the White House counsel, the President, or the President or Vice President, and the Attorney General or Deputy or Associate Attorney General.

That policy is represented by this chart. On the White House side, the only people authorized to have these initial discussions on criminal cases are the President, Vice President, Deputy White House Counsel, and the White House Counsel. Within the Department of Justice, it is only the Attorney General, Deputy Attorney General, and the Associate Attorney General—a grand total of seven people.

As I noted during the Attorney General’s testimony before the Judiciary Committee last month, that rule was changed in an April 2002 memo from Attorney General Ashcroft. The new policy permits initial communications between the White House and the Justice Department regarding any pending Department investigation or criminal or civil case should involve only the White House counsel, the President, or the President or Vice President, and the Attorney General or Deputy or Associate Attorney General.

That policy is represented by this chart. On the White House side, the only people authorized to have these initial discussions on criminal cases are the President, Vice President, Deputy White House Counsel, and the White House Counsel. Within the Department of Justice, it is only the Attorney General, Deputy Attorney General, and the Associate Attorney General—a grand total of seven people.