

spectrum or range of severity “set an inappropriately high standard for the determination of whether an individual is substantially limited in a major life activity and pose the risk of confusing the threshold determination of who is covered by the act.” (154 Cong. Rec. S8355 (daily ed September 11, 2008)). This was certainly not our intention.

We also agree with the Senate managers that “such terms encourage the courts to engage in an inappropriate level of scrutiny as to the severity of an impairment when determining whether an individual has a disability.” (Senate Statement of Managers to Accompany S. 3406, Endnote 14.) We intend that the ADA Amendments will have the opposite effect, by reducing the depth of analysis related to the severity of the limitation of the impairment and returning the focus to the question of discrimination.

S. 3406 also includes a restatement of current law related to fundamental alterations in order to assure institutions of higher education that the ADA Amendments Act does not change the principle that entities need not make modifications to policies, practices or procedures that would fundamentally alter the nature of programs or services, as is true under current law.

For example, a university would not be expected to eliminate academic requirements essential to the instruction being pursued by a student, although the school may be required to make modifications in order to enable students with disabilities to meet those academic requirements. Current regulations provide that “Modifications may include changes in the length of time permitted for the completion of degree requirements, substitution of specific courses required for the completion of degree requirements, and adaptation of the manner in which specific courses are conducted.” (Senate Statement of Managers to Accompany S. 3406, Endnote 14)

Educational, testing, certification and licensing entities covered by the ADA also maintain discretion to establish appropriate and reasonable documentation requirements related to the determination of disability, as is true under current law. In June 2008, the Department of Justice offered that “a testing entity should accept without further inquiry documentation provided by a qualified professional who has made an individualized assessment of the applicant. Appropriate documentation may include a letter from a qualified professional or evidence of a prior diagnosis, accommodation, or classification, such as eligibility for a special education program.” (Examinations and Courses, 73 Federal Register 34539 (June 17, 2008))

Once an individual has established that he or she experiences (or has a record of) a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits a major life activity, such individual is entitled to reasonable and appropriate modifications in policies, practices or procedures so long as the modifications in question do not fundamentally alter the nature of the program or service.

We expect that the less demanding standard applied to the definition of disability will allow students and licensure candidates with documented disabilities to more readily access appropriate accommodations on examinations when needed.

Last, we must remember that the ADA definition of disability applies also to our public elementary and secondary schools. We believe that most schools currently operate in a manner consistent with the original congressional intent of Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act and the ADA and should be minimally affected by the change in definition. We do not anticipate a need for extensive changes to the current regulations and published guidance provided by the Office of Civil Rights at the Department of Education.

This legislation has broad support: Democrats and Republicans, employers, civil rights groups, and advocates for individuals with disabilities. I'm pleased we were able to work together to get to this point.

In particular, I would like to thank the members of the Employer and Disability Alliance, including the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, the Epilepsy Foundation, the American Association of People with Disabilities, the Bazelon Center for Mental Health Law, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, HR Policy Association, the National Association of Manufacturers, and the Society for Human Resource Management for their hard work and long hours of negotiation with each other and with our staff.

Of course, much credit is due to Majority Leader HOYER and Congressman SENSENBRENNER for their leadership and tenacity in the House; and Senator HARKIN, Senator KENNEDY and Senator HATCH for their skill in moving this legislation through the Senate with unanimous support.

It is time to restore the original intent of the ADA and ensure that the tens of millions of Americans with disabilities who want to work, attend school, and fully participate in our communities will have the chance to do so.

I look forward to passage of this legislation.
