

Enough is enough. It is time for the House Republicans to act. They have wasted far too much time already failing to consider a bill that the Senate considered, and passed in less than 2 months.

A year ago the Senate Judiciary Committee, under Chairman LEAHY's leadership, was in the middle of marking up the commonsense immigration reform. After 2 weeks of consideration, what did they do? A bipartisan bill was reported out of that committee. Within a month the Senate passed immigration reform and sent it to the House of Representatives. It was a good start. It was really good. But in our system of government, what we did here will have absolutely no meaning unless the House takes it up. We were able to move on immigration reform quickly because both Senate Democrats and Senate Republicans understood the need to fix a broken system.

What is the House Republicans' excuse? Why are they doing this? What are they achieving by dragging their feet on immigration reform? They claim to be working on things—they say jobs, they say legislation to reduce the debt. If they are really interested in reducing the debt, pass this bill. It is $1 trillion to reduce our debt—$1 trillion. What are they doing over there? Day after day, investigations—they investigate everything and accomplish nothing.

The fact is that the Senate-passed immigration bill reduces the deficit and spurs the economy more than the House-passed bills awaiting Senate action combined. I repeat: $1 trillion. The immigration legislation passed by the Senate reduces the deficit more than all the bills passed by the House that are currently awaiting action in the Senate.

So it is no wonder that even pro-Republican organizations are calling on Speaker BOEHNER to stop wasting time. Earlier this week we heard Tom Donohue, the president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, say that it is in the Republicans' best interests to pass immigration reform. He said unless the House passes immigration reform this year, Republicans shouldn't even bother running in 2016. So that is what he said, and it is probably true.

Politics should not be the only reason the House passes this bill. Immigration reform is far more important than any election-year politicking. Immigration reform is about families and communities.

The DREAM Act is a perfect example. In September 2010, I was in the midst of what some considered a tough re-election campaign when I helped champion Senator DURBIN's DREAM Act. Though it was eventually blocked by a Republican filibuster, I did my best to pass the DREAM Act, even as some said it would cost me the election. As everyone knows by this time, the President, as he said in his State of the Union Address—and he did this last Congress and he is doing it this Congress—because we are doing virtually nothing here in the Senate, he decided to do something administratively. That is why we have deferred status for these young men and women who want to go into the military, finish their education, and this is the only place they have ever known as home.

The bill that passed here is common sense. Eleven million people—we cannot fiscally deport 11 million people. We cannot physically do it. It just will not work. That is why the legislation that was crafted here on a bipartisan basis is fair to everyone. What it says is that if this is your home and you have improper papers, we will give you some time to get those adjusted. It is going to take some time. You are not going to go to the front of the line; you are going to go to the back of the line. You are going to have to pay taxes. You are going to have to work. You are going to have to stay out of trouble and learn English. It would take about a dozen years to have your status adjusted, but at least during that period of time you can come out of the shadows.

Recently, though, the House Judiciary Committee chairman appeared on a Sunday news show and tried very, very unsuccessfully to justify his party's inaction. His reasoning as to why the House is dragging its heels? Republicans claim President Obama cannot be trusted to enforce immigration law. So what Republicans are really saying is that they will not act on immigration reform unless there are more deportations, more families torn apart. That does not make a lot of sense to most people. In a nutshell, it is the House immigration platform.

Why work to help undocumented immigrants get right with the law? Why do that? Because it is good for the country. It is fair. And, as I have indicated, it is good monetarily for this country. But what the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee said on one of those Sunday shows is in keeping with what they have done. It is hard to comprehend.

I guess that is what we have learned to expect from a House Republican conference whose immigration policy is dictated by the likes of Congressman STEVEN KING. Remember him, Mr. President? He is the Congressmen who, instead of permitting immigrants to enlist in the military and earn citizenship, would rather send them "on a bus back to Tijuana." That is a quote from him. Congressman KING also claimed that for every hard-working undocumented student, there are 100 more working as drug mules with "calves the size of cantaloupes because they're hauling 75 pounds of marijuana across the desert."

The fact of the matter is that these men and women, with their families, are our neighbors, our classmates, our colleagues. They are here for a lot of different reasons. They have overstayed their visas. Some were brought here illegally. But we have to deal with this issue. So many of them are like Astrid Silva, who is one of the DREAMers. She was 4 years old, a little girl in a boat coming across the Rio Grande River. She had her Rosary beads and a little doll and her mom. Nevada is the only place she has ever known as home. Because she was so frightened, she was afraid to go anywhere.

This is the right thing to do. We need to move forward on comprehensive immigration reform, and we can only do that if the Republicans in the House, led by Speaker BOEHNER, do the right thing. It is very important. I urge the House to stop wasting time and bring immigration reform to a vote. Give the American people the assurance that we are working to finally mend our broken immigration system and give families the opportunity to come forward and work toward legal status. It really is the right thing to do.

I suggest the absence of a quorum. The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The minority leader is recognized.

POLICE WEEK

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, this week we recognize National Police Week. National Police Week is a time to pay tribute to the service and sacrifice of the men and women in Federal, State, and local law enforcement across our Nation. Law enforcement is one of our Nation's highest callings, as brave peace officers put themselves on the line to defend the lives, safety and property of their neighbors. Therefore, it is entirely appropriate that we pause this week and throughout the year to thank them for their service.

The Nation's capital is host to thousands of police officers who have come to celebrate National Police Week with their fellow officers. No one but another peacekeeper or their families can truly grasp the duty of defending their communities. No one but another peacekeeper can truly know the joys of camaraderie and the sorrows of deep loss that each one has experienced.

I want to especially recognize the many men and women of Kentucky law enforcement. Many of them have traveled to Washington this week, and I will have the pleasure of meeting with some of Kentucky's finest and their families later today, including the Ellis family and the Shaw family.

I am personally grateful to them for bravely risking their lives in our defense. Sadly, this occasion of National
